The religious services of the church, which were conducted in the chapel of the college building, are, it is expected, to be held for the present in the Methodist church. The insurance on the building was $1,400, but the loss has not yet been fully adjusted. No determination has as yet been reached as to when or whether the building will be rebuilt.

Also several varieties of pheasants and quail, and the rarest pair of birds in captivity known to be in existence, namely, a pair of birds supposed to be a cross between the Blue Grouse and the China pheasant. These are handsome birds, now full grown and resemble both the grouse and China Pheasant. The show will be held in the Opera House, Nov. 30th, Dec. 1st and 2nd, further notice of which will be given in these columns later.

BY SPECIAL TRAIN.

Extremely low Rate for the Trip—Annual O. A. C.—Eugene Game.

Manager Stimson has arranged for a special train to take the OAC football team and friends to Eugene on Saturday of next week for the big annual game with the University eleven. The train is to leave the C. & E. station at 8:30 or nine o'clock, will run straight through to Eugene, and on the return trip will leave Eugene about seven o'clock, reaching Corvallis at 8:30 or nine o'clock p. m. The railroad companies have made the unusually low rate of one fare for the round trip, or $1.85 in all from Corvallis to Eugene and return. The round trip rate for a similar excursion two years ago was $2.50. The rate on the present occasion places the trip within reach of everybody, and will well nigh convert the day into a municipal holiday at Corvallis, for there are indications that the excursion will be a record breaker. The game has come to be one of State-wide interest, and the enthusiasm for it this year, here and elsewhere, transcends all things of the kind in the past.

Besides the special train out of Corvallis for the game, negotiations are pending for a special train from Monmouth and Independence, carrying excursionists from there in time Saturday morning to make connections with the Corvallis special. Manager Stimson is awaiting a reply from Mr. Hirschberg, proprietor of the Independence motor line with reference to the matter. Many people of Independence and Monmouth have written for rates and information concerning the Corvallis-Eugene special, and it is certain that if a train connects from Independence, many from that section will join the crowd.

DOWN THE GRADE.

Over the Boat and Into the River—Horses and Wagon—A Ferry Scene.

A sensational accident happened at the Corvallis ferry late Tuesday afternoon. A team and a heavily laden wagon dashed at full speed down the grade on the west side of the river, sped swiftly the length of the boat, tore away the chains and big timber that bars the boat's end, and plunged headlong into the water below. It all transpired in a twinkling, giving but little time for the three persons about the boat to scramble to places of safety. The happy fact in this incident is that no other teams were aboard the boat at the moment, or the details told in these lines would be of far more serious import.

The occasion of the accident was the fact that the brake on the wagon failed to hold. This was followed by an effort of the team to hold the load, when the neck yoke gave way. On the wagon was 1,200 feet of lumber, five kegs of nails, and a large quantity of hardware. The owner is Wesley Millhollen, who was hauling materials over to his farm for building a new house.

When the brake broke, the trouble was on apace. The driver held the horses held fairly well, until the neck yoke broke, and the heavy wagon smashed against them. The impact was terrible and the scene that followed extremely ugly. Down the grade the outfit passed at great speed. Before the boat was reached, the driver rolled off the wagon into a place of safety, and escaped with only a few bruises. On to the boat, across it, then off of it and into the waters of the river went team and wagon.

The horses were saved. The chains that bound the bar across the east end of the boat caught in the breast strap of one of the horses and pulled the heads of the team, after the outfit went over, back towards the boat. This enabled those about the boat to get ropes on the horses by which they were held until the harness was cut away. Once freed, one of the horses struck out and swam across to the east side of the river. The other landed safely on the west bank at the ferry landing.

The wagon sank to the bottom of the river, was subsequently fished out and drawn across the river to the east side where it was pulled ashore. The lumber in the load happened to be bound with a chain and it was all recovered. Two of the five kegs of nails were also fished out, but most of the hardware is still somewhere in the bottom of the Willamette. The accident is one of the luckiest yet chronicled, in that there was so much chance for serious consequences with so little of loss actually consequent.
