Davis, H. F. Fischer, J. Rickard, J. H. Harris, B. W. Wilson, P. Avery, S. N. Wilkins, J. Wilkinson, N. Tartar, E. D. Jackson, H. L. Bush, Price, J. F. Yates, W. Taylor, J. W. Crawford.

The large crowd of students and friends who gathered in College chapel Friday evening to hear the organ recital of Professor Gerard Taillandier were amply repaid for their trip to the college. The program was a varied one and the performer was widely applauded from the beginning. Perhaps the number calling for the most applause was Dubois' Offertory in E, and another popular number was Pilgrim's Song of Hope by Batiste. A neat sum was realized that will go towards defraying the expense of transporting the pipe organ used on this occasion from Portland to this city.

The committee of arrangement for the general clean up of Corvallis, is being enlarged, in order to have enough members to deal with whatever needs that may arise. Arrangements are being made to cut the grass for a nominal sum and in the meantime all persons that can be wanted to mow either with scythe or mower between now and June 7th, which is the date on which the clean-up is to take place. The committee will furnish teams to haul away free of charge all rubbish that may be piled up in front of any place of business on the street. It will not of course, furnish teams to haul trash gathered on private premises.

BUSY SCENES.

Some of the Things which Enliven Corvallis Industrially.

To the average American whose commercialism dominates him to such a marked degree, few sounds are more agreeable than the roll of car wheels, the swash of river craft, the chuck of transportation wagons, the whirr of saws, the crack of hammers, the muffled notes of pick and shovel, all combine to make the hum of industry. A walk about the city of Corvallis will disclose the activity common to larger cities.

In the neighborhood of the City Hall, a force of workmen are shoveling earth at a lively rate, excavating for the sewer which is to extend through two blocks from the Jefferson main. Workmen are also engaged on the Harris-Miller lateral, also to connect with the Jefferson main.

A string of fifteen teams plod through Main street all hauling gravel to a half-mile stretch of the Sol King road recently graded. Other teams are hauling screened gravel which is shoveled aboard cars at the foot of Washington street to be conveyed to the city's reservoir. Three teams are engaged in hauling from the railroad track to the works.

Six incoming daily trains and a like number departing lend a part to the chorus of industry, while the exhaust of Willamette river steamboats is a feature of the melody. Innumerable farm wagons laden with products of the creamery, and dray-loads of the same, carted from the depots to the local butter and ice cream factory, are very suggestive of the commercial advancement of the city.

Forty-five laborers with pick and shovel working on the streets of Corvallis to complete the new mountain water system affords a glance at our commercial activity which is encouraging. Thirty of these men in line along Main street, excavating for distributing pipe of the system presents an inspiring scene, and dissipates the notion of want in Corvallis households. The whole is an earnest of prosperity.
