NEARLY SIXTY YEARS AGO.

He Wrote About Oregon in Verse— And Here is his Handiwork.

The following poem was composed and written January 1848, Medders Vanderpool in a description of the Willamette valley to his friends and relatives in Missouri. Medders Vanderpool was a surveyor, surveying many of the old donation claims in Polk and Benton counties. He was born in Ash county, North Carolina in January 1798, and died in August, 1896, at Sodaville, Linn county. He crossed the plains with ox team in 1846 locating on his old donation claim at Parker station, Polk county.

The Willamette Valley.

As handsome a valley as ever was made, Lies between the Coast mountains and lofty Cascades. Spotted and fringed with majestic firs, And bold flowing rivers abound everywhere.

Adorned with ranges of grassy oak hills, With spring and brook and murmuring rills, With spreading oak trees of limited stature, Resembling an orchard but planted by nature.

The seasons are mild, the atmosphere pure. The health of all living abound everywhere. Each season with blessings infallibly sure, Respond to their calling throughout the whole year.

Of the first in rotation is spring of the year, When millions of flourishing flowers appear. The lily, the rose, the violet blue, And ten thousand more of every hue.

Willamette is now with calico crowned; She's spread a new carpet all over the ground. The groves all resound with songs of the birds, And the hills echo with rejoicing herds.

The next comes on is a healthy cool summer; Which passes off sweetly with scarcely a murmur; Fanned with the breezes of mountain pure air, Giving to each creature its portion to share.

When fall of the year makes its approach The noise of the herds don't echo so much. The leaves are now fading on deciduous trees. Tall evergreens merrily fanning the breeze.

The first of November when winter is near, The drizzly south rains are sure to appear. When millions of geese, brants, ducks and cranes, Flock in from the north soon after their rains.

Which feed on green wheat and grass of the dales, And roost about water along the ash swals; What's meant by the swails is the broad spread drains, Which empty the water that's made by the rains.

Through the whole winter the native birds sing, And the grass as green as the middle of spring. Tho' sometimes we have a short spell of snow, Then comes a thaw and a great overflow.

And all the low lands of inundation Float off the fence of many plantation. Sometimes it happens that very high water Surround swine and cattle and make them its slaughter.

Perhaps some might say keep such in the dark, Its speaks for itself by the high water mark. Tho' very high water seldom occurs Its happened but once in several years.

Let's tell of the bad as well as the good, And have it in order and well understood, Then come to the Willamette, there's plenty of room To make your own choice and take you a home.
