As to a President.

A president is sought for OAC. That is part of the errand of a board meeting today. It will be the hope of a multitude that wisdom may prevail. The possibilities of the institution are boundless. They mean so much that few, if any, have adequate conception of them. They involve a line of work that the federal government considers so important that congress has recently raised the national endowment from $35,000 to $60,000 a year. It is to be prosecuted in a state yet in its infancy, so far as development is concerned. It is a state with a population of less than 500,000 souls but capable of giving thrift, home and life to several millions. The education of young men and women for finding and exploiting its resources and for directing investigation into what those manifold resources are, is the errand of the institution. Faithfully done, it means untold benefits for Oregon. It is a field of so prodigious import that the best talent to be obtained in the country is not too good for OAC. For president, the institution should have a man worth while, one who can go forward with the great work that President Gatch and his assistants have so creditably begun.

Homeseekers.

Homeseekers are pouring into Oregon at the rate of a thousand a day, and Corvallis has nothing to apologize for. Her house is in order. She has the best water system and the best water in the state of Oregon, as good in fact as there is in the world. It comes from a snow peak and its flow is through a pipeline that leaves no taste of iron rust. It is as pure as the crystal spring that is its source of supply. The town has electric lights at less cost by 35 per cent than any other town in Oregon. It has a system of sewers that perfectly perform their function. At her door is reared the greatest educational institution in the state, the good influences of which permeate the social conditions of the town. At her feet flows a beautiful river stretching away on every horizon are piles of hill and mountain range of every varied hue and shape to delight the eye. She has no hoodlum gang and is without a place of shame. She is the heart of a county of uplifted moral and stable citizenship. Her growth and her business conditions are unsurpassed by any of her sister towns. Why should Corvallis apologize when her house is so well ordered?

WOULD SEND THEM EAST.

Students Want Basket Ball Team to go to Jamestown—Raising Funds.

OAC students want to send the basket ball team to Jamestown, and will make an effort to do so. In September a series of world championship games is to be held, and their admirers in and out of college are anxious for Captain Swann and his men to try conclusions with the big Eastern teams that will be there. It is estimated that it will cost $1,500 to pay the expenses of the team, and leading students at the college are making an effort to raise the money by subscription. A paper was started yesterday and the first twenty names, all of whom were students, yielded a nest egg of more than $150. Many of the boys contributed $10 each. The canvass will be continued and the promoters of the movement have high hopes that it will end in success. They say the basket ball men have achieved more marked and consistent successes than have ever been reached by any athletic team at the college, and they believe the advertising already done and that the proposed trip will give to Corvallis and the collegewill more than counterbalance the very large sum that the trip will cost. And they are correct.

IT BROUGHT $36.

At Eleven Months—And Netted its Owner Twenty-nine.

Thirty six dollars is the price at which George Horning recently sold an 11-months old calf. At such figures farmers ought to see a straight road to prosperity. A few head of cattle at that rate will beat a big field of wheat, especially when the latter goes at only 60 cents. It ought to be a live hint to grow less wheat and more livestock. An attractive feature is that the livestock will walk to market itself, while the wheat has to be hauled. This Horning calf weighed dressed at 11 months, 480 pounds. It was sold for beef in the local market at four cents live weight. It was fed chop for two months and during the period consumed 500 pounds that cost $5, and no more. Its mother was a milk cow and throughout the summer furnished milk and butter for the family table. A little hay went to the calf occasionally, but the rest of its ration was grass from the pasture and milk from its mother. Its whole cost to the owner was perhaps $7. Its net return was nearly $30 within the 11 months. What better investment can the thousands of homeseekers pouring into Oregon find, than a Benton farm from which hogs can now be sold in Portland at eight cents, mutton sheep at $7 per head, ewes with a lamb at her side for $10 and a good horse at $300, all with farm land selling at less than half the price the same land in the East goes at? When the bottom lands are seeded to alfalfa and the foothill farms planted to apples, and when her farmers become growers of more livestock, and sell less of their grain and feed more of it, Benton will come into her own and be a county whose annual products will run into the millions.
