No skill is necessary; the dealers (center staff, board members and volunteers) will help players learn the rules of the games, she said.

The fundraiser has brought in an average of $2,100 every year, according to Knop.

The equipment is donated by the Seaside and Gearhart fire departments and local candy-maker Brian Taylor and his family, she said.

Community members who want to volunteer that evening can contact Annette Campbell, the center's director, at 503-436-1040.

"We particularly need volunteers who would like to be blackjack dealers," Knop said.

"It's going to be a fun night," said Christy Bisping, the center's development director. "It definitely benefits our center, and we rely very heavily on all the money that we bring in."
