

CCC screens documentary about timebanking June 18

SEASIDE and ASTORIA — Clatsop Community College will host This As That Productions and its partners Lower Columbia TimeBank and Portland Time Bank for a free community screening of "Time as Money," a new feature documentary film by Lenore and Mark Eklund that celebrates the power of community that is built through the complimentary currency of timebanking.

"Time as Money" will be shown twice Thursday, June 18. The first showing will be at 2:30 p.m. at Clatsop Community College's South County Campus, 1455 N. Roosevelt Drive in Seaside. The second showing will be on the Astoria campus in Columbia Hall, Room 219, 1651 Lexington Ave. at 6:30p.m. The screening will be followed by a question-and-answer period with Eklund and board members from the Lower Columbia TimeBank.

"Time as Money" is a documentary exploring timebanking, a service exchange program that uses time as the currency. Timebanking began in the 1980s while civil rights lawyer and former speech writer for Robert Kennedy, Edgar Cahn, was lying in a hospital bed after a heart attack. This experience of feeling helpless, similar to the disenfranchised and unemployed, gave him the idea to create a new system of money as a tool to connect people and neighbors called time dollars. Timebankers find that not only does this complimentary currency bring improvement to their lives, but it empowers them to create larger-scaled timebank projects, giving everyone involved ownership in the community.

This film was made possible with the support of the timebank community. The film was funded with time, the currency of timebanking, with which production help were paid. No production quality was compromised. Instead, the abundance of the talent in the timebank community allowed This As That Productions to finish this feature-length project.

Portland musician brings rock sounds Casey Neill to perform June 13 at Peninsula Arts Center

LONG BEACH, Wash. — Acclaimed singer-songwriter Casey Neill will perform at 7 p.m. Saturday, June 13 at the Peninsula Arts Center.

Neill has performed throughout the world on stages such as New York's Town Hall, San Francisco's Great American Music Hall, and Glasgow's Old Fruitmarket. He has played as a member of the Minus Five as well as sharing stages with Jello Biafra, Pete Seeger, Sunny Day Real Estate, Camper Van Beethoven and countless more.

Irish supergroup Solas recorded Neill's original song "Lowground" on their albums "Waiting for an Echo" and "Reunion." In 1997, Neill inked a three-record deal with the folk label Appleseed and was featured on their tribute to Pete Seeger along with Bruce Springsteen, Billy Bragg and Bonnie Raitt. A compilation of his material entitled "Memory Against Forgetting" was released by Amy Ray's Daemon imprint in 2005.

Following a few years of residence in New York City, Neill moved back to Portland
