History center’s ‘Oregon Transformed’ series continues with discussion panel

CANNON BEACH — Presented in partnership with the Cannon Beach History Center & Museum and the Oregon Historical Society, the “Oregon Transformed: WWII Legacies on the Coast” exhibit continues with a panel discussion at 7 p.m. Friday, June 12 at the history center. Panelists include David Lewis, Steve McQuiddy and Laura Gifford.

This event is free and open to the public.

The “Oregon Transformed” series considers long-term impacts of World War II in local regions around the state within broad thematic frameworks. Presenters in Cannon Beach will address the theme of “consent and dissent” by discussing subjects, including “conscientious objectors” who lived and worked on the coast during the war; the attack on Fort Stevens and its treatment by policymakers and the media; and the work of tribes during the war and their termination in the post-war period. Panelists will offer carefully prepared presentations, leaving plenty of time for audience questions and discussions.

This program is presented in association with the Oregon Historical Society’s exhibit “WWII: A World at War, A State Transformed” and the Cannon Beach History Center & Museum’s exhibit “WWII on the Oregon Coast” which celebrates the 70th anniversary of the end of war by exploring the events and emotions of a state at war.

Gifford is a historian of modern American politics with a special interest in the dynamics of Oregon’s political landscape.

McQuiddy is the author of “Here on the Edge,” the story of how a small group of World War II conscientious objectors plowed the ground for the social and cultural revolutions of the 1960s. McQuiddy writes and lectures on the eccentric margins of Pacific Northwest history.

Lewis is an independent educator, author and anthropology researcher who lives in Salem in the homeland of his people, the Santiam Kalapuya.

The Cannon Beach History Center & Museum is located at 1387 S. Spruce St. Seating for this event will be limited. For more information, visit the Oregon Historical Society website at www.ohs.org, Cannon Beach History Center at www.cbhistory.org, or call 503-436-9301.
