

WINDSHIELD CARE

Your windshield is your window to the driving world. Keeping it clean and clear is a priority

From bug buildup to cracks in the glass, there are a number of factors that can cause obstructed views through your windshield. It is up to you to identify and resolve them.

WIPER BLADES

Worn wiper blades are one of the most dangerous flaws your vehicle can have, especially when the springtime rain begins.

Wipers can malfunction in a number of ways or even stop working altogether. The most common issue with wipers is a worn blade.

Luckily, replacing them is both easy and inexpensive. Car care experts recommend that you replace both at the same time.

If you're not confident in your ability to effectively install new wipers, check with your local auto parts store to find out if they offer free installation. Many of them do, which can give you peace of mind that they are installed correctly.

CRACKS

A lot of us have experienced the cracking windshield. You're driving down the road when a rock flies up and dings the glass. The chip turns into a small crack, which then turns into a large spider web crack.

If you're going to drive the car before you repair the windshield, be sure the crack isn't impeding your line of sight.

Windshield crack repair kits are sold in the auto parts departments of many local and big box stores. If applied correctly, these acrylic adhesive and filler options are great for repairing small chips or cracks. If the damage to your car is more severe, a trip to the auto glass shop may be in your future. Whatever route you decide to take, it is important to put safety first.
