CMH encourages employers to support breastfeeding

The Daily Astorian

Columbia Memorial Hospital is celebrating World Breastfeeding Week by encouraging other businesses and health clinics to support breastfeeding women in the community.

During the week of Aug. 1-7, the CMH Lactation Program will be distributing educational materials and treat bags to hospital-affiliated businesses and clinics. The theme of this year's World Breastfeeding

Week is "Breastfeeding and Work: Let's make it work!"

Businesses that support breastfeeding women by providing flexible breaks and a small, dedicated space to express milk realize significant payoffs, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Lactation-friendly employers have found that employee retention is better, sick time taken to care for children is less for both mothers and fathers, and health care costs and insurance costs are lower.

CMH's international board certified lactation consultants are also available to provide assistance to local employers in their efforts to implement workplace lactation support and/or policies.

For information about World Breastfeeding Week, go to <http://worldbreastfeedingweek.org>. To contact the CMH Lactation Program, call 503-325-4321.
