UNIVERSAL VIDEO

In October 1983, brothers Steve and Jim Haugen opened Universal Video with 400 square feet and 175 movies. In 1984 they began moving more video's into the adjoining business, formerly known as George Bee's Discount Books, then slowly but surely their business grew into what they have today. The Universal showroom is an enormous 3000 square feet, housing 25,000+ titles, with an extensive special DVD section. You can find videos dating back to 1915, the Birth of a Nation, in black and white to new releases. You know immediately when you walk into this video store why it is so successful... Steve and Jim always have a smile on their face, a warm hello and ask, may I help you?

For 31 years, Video Horizons has been bringing affordable entertainment to Clatsop County. From humble beginnings of just 600 VHS videotapes, the current library has grown to over 40,000 movies and video games.

In the 80's, video stores were plentiful. There were about ten video stores in the Astoria-Warrenton area when owner Neal Cummings opened his store in the old Taco Terrific building across from McDonald's. Then, in the 90's, Blockbuster and Hollywood corporate chains began taking over the video landscape, and independent video stores were put out of business all around the country. Only a handful of independently-owned video stores survived the onslaught. Moving across the street into the 6000-square foot Fisher Brothers building, over 11 years ago, helped Video Horizons survive.

Now in 2015, the landscape has changed once again. the corporate behemoths have toppled under their own weight. Netflix, Redbox and pay-per-view seem to be the people's choices for their movies. But the strength of Video Horizons remains...affordability, selection and good customer service. Because Video Horizons provides so many copies of the hits, the previously-viewed selection of DVD's has grown tremendously.

The staff of Video Horizons would like to thank the good people of Clatsop County for their support all these years. SUPPORT LOCALLY-OWNED BUSINESSES!
