Student partners on beach cleanup at 'mega sink'

The Daily Astorian

Astoria High School senior Devon Keiner is partnering with Marc Ward, the co-founder of Sea Turtles Forever, on a beach cleanup for his senior project.

The cleanup starts at 10 a.m. Jan. 16 in a tidal inlet just north of the South Jetty and accessed from Parking Lot C in Fort Stevens State Park on Clatsop Spit. The inlet is the site of a "mega sink" of microplastic deposits in which Ward has orga-nized several cleanups.

Those interested in participating can contact Keiner at 503-791-5891 or dnk-kilakeiner16@astoriak12.org; Ward at 503-739-1446 or marc@seaturtlesforever.org; or show up. Volunteers will sign a liability release form.

Lawsuit targets government's decision on Pacific marten

Associated Press

PORTLAND — An environmental group is suing the government over its failure to protect coastal populations of the Pacific marten, a small forest animal related to the weasel.

The Center for Biological Diversity and another group say the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's April decision to deny Endangered Species Act protection to the marten ignored science.

The center first petitioned for protection for the marten in 2010.

Federal biologists concluded that multiple stressors — from logging and development to exposure to poisons at marijuana plantations — do not rise to the level of a threat for the marten.

According to field surveys, fewer than 100 Pacific marten survive in California, while an unknown but very small number are found in Oregon.
