Lewis and Clark National Historic Trail Employees receive award

OMAHA, Neb. — For over 30 years, Western National Parks Association (WNPA) has recognized excellence in service to national parks during their annual Board Reception and Award Ceremony in Tucson, Ariz. On Nov. 19, two employees of Lewis and Clark National Historic Trail were presented with the Stewart L. Udall Award.

Richard Basch, American Indian liaison, and Jill Hamilton-Anderson, education specialist, were recognized for their work and leadership in the creation of "Honoring Tribal Legacies: An Epic Journey of Healing" in collaboration with the University of Oregon. The comprehensive suite of resources, that includes a two-volume set of guidance publications and demonstration teachings, was developed with the purpose of opening up an intellectual inquiry that will challenge teachers to rethink how they teach Lewis and Clark.

Honoring Tribal Legacies invites educators to learn and explore how to integrate the American Indian role and offer a more balanced perspective of American history before, during and after the Lewis and Clark expedition in a way that honors tribes at all grade levels, and in multiple subject areas.

ity and sincerity of both Jill and Richard," commented Superintendent Mark Weekley. "We are humbled to share Honoring Tribal Legacies with formal and informal educators across the country."

The WNPA Stewart L. Udall honors those who work to boost park interpretation programs, carry the park message to popular audiences, or rally broad public support for parks. The award was named for the noted conservationist, Secretary of the Interior (1961-1969), and former WNPA board member (1984-1994).
