

Small ports seek $48 million in federal funding

Ilwaco asks for $700,000; Chinook needs $800,000

Ports in the Northwest are waiting to see if the nation's budget will include funding for small ports that often struggle to obtain federal dollars.

The Northwestern congressional delegation advocated that the president's fiscal year 2017 budget set aside roughly $48 million to maintain jetties and the channels leading to small ports. The funding would include Pacific County's Port of Ilwaco and Port of Chinook.

The budget plan is expected to come out on Feb. 9.

A letter signed by Oregon's U.S. Sens. Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley and Washington's Patty Murray and Maria Cantwell asked the U.S. Office of Management and Budget to recognize the needs of small ports.

"Despite the Administration's responsibility to fund these projects, small ports throughout the Northwest continue to be routinely overlooked in budget requests and remain chronically underfunded," the senators wrote.

The Pacific Northwest Waterways Association, a regional, multi-industry association that focuses on trade, navigation and economic development policies, asked for $2.1 million for the Port of Ilwaco out of the requested $48 million, along with $800,000 for the Port of Chinook and $2.7 million for the Skipanon River Channel.

Port of Chinook Manager Guy Glenn said $700,000 of the funding would go toward a major maintenance report on the Ilwaco channel pile dikes. The report could identify what is causing the increased siltation of the port's channel, Glenn said.

Glenn said he believes the navigation pile dikes, which help funnel water through the channel, are failing. The failure may also be connected to the Port's consistent dredging needs to maintain safe water levels, he said.

As a temporary solution, the port has established a critical area around marker 11 where the channel dips below the minimum depth of 16 feet and is working with corps and Coast Guard to realign the channel.

"Addressing the cause of siltation will hopefully reduce the need for annual maintenance at the mouth of the channel, which would save us money and effort," Glenn said.

Convenience store at Seaside Chevron gets overhaul

Construction of new building to take place in the spring

SEASIDE — The owner of the Chevron gas station in south Seaside is replacing the existing convenience store with a new, larger building using the empty lot north of the site.

The Seaside Planning Commission conditionally approved a request by applicant David Vonada of Tolovana Architects, on behalf of owner Marci Utti, to demolish the convenience store associated with the Chevron gas station and construct a new two-story building.

"We think it's important, for the gateway to the community, to update things and keep things looking nice," Utti said at the commission meeting earlier this month.

The property is located at 1215 S. Holladay Drive, off U.S. Highway 101, or Roosevelt Drive, and between ave-

The owner of the Chevron gas station near the south entrance to Seaside is planning to demolish the existing convenience store and build a new, larger one using the property directly north of the station. The project is anticipated to begin this spring.

Landscaped areas are proposed on the east and west sides of the building. The site plan also proposes new sidewalks be built along Avenue M, adjacent to the back of the building, and a portion of Roosevelt Drive, to create a continuous public walkway along that road. However, Vonada said, the final configuration for Avenue M, which is an unimproved right-of-way, is subject to input from the Seaside Public Works Department.

A short-term bike parking rack is proposed near the northeast pedestrian walkway between the building and the sidewalk fronting Roosevelt Drive. Not counting the pump island parking spaces, a total of 12 off-street parking spaces in front of the building will be provided, according to a staff report from Planning Director Kevin Cupples.

"We don't want to try to reinvent the function of the site," Vonada said.

The design team and owner are in the process of pricing the project and completing construction and bidding documents; they will proceed with submitting applications for building permits in the early spring.

Construction is slated to start this spring, depending on financing. Utti estimates the project will take about six months to complete.

The plan is to construct the new building and have it near completion before demolishing the old building to create "virtually no interruption to the business whatsoever," Vonada said. Full services should continue throughout the entire project, which is important since it will take place throughout the summer months.

The new building will be approximately 3,700 square feet on the first story, which will be used primarily for retail sales. The second story, which will be used for office space and storage, will be approximately 1,290 square feet.

"It will be a major, major improvement over what's there," Vonada said. "I think it's going to be an attractive building on all four sides."
