

Ammon Bundy: Oregon refuge 'belongs to the people'

Jennifer Williams, who owns a small ranch outside of Burns, said she arrived at the demonstrations to send a message that the standoff supporters don't represent the voice of the community outside the Harney County Courthouse in Burns, Monday. Hundreds gathered to protest and support the armed occupation of a national wildlife preserve.

were taken into custody during a traffic stop last week that left one occupier dead.

All face a felony conspiracy charge of using intimidation to prevent federal employees from their work. Bundy will stay behind bars while his attorneys build their case that the standoff was intended as a "peaceful protest and civil disobedience." A federal judge has allowed a couple of others to go free pending trial.

Another court hearing in the case is scheduled for Wednesday afternoon.

Meanwhile, the handful of remaining occupiers offered no signs they are ready to leave. They gave an interview Monday on an online talk show on a YouTube channel called Revolution Radio.

"We're still here," said David Fry, adding that the four hope sympathizers will come out to back them up. "We need the American people to get the courage to stand up."

A makeshift roadside memorial for rancher LaVoy Finicum stands on a highway north of Burns on Sunday. Finicum was killed Tuesday night in a confrontation with the FBI and Oregon State Police on a remote road. Four people occupying the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge held their position Sunday. They have demanded that they be allowed to leave without being arrested.

Bundy pleaded for them to go home and aligned with his father, Nevada rancher Cliven Bundy, on demanding federal and state authorities clear out of the area.

The elder Bundy, who was involved in a high-profile 2014 standoff with the government over grazing rights, sent a certified letter to the local sheriff Monday, saying the refuge should be placed under local control.

Unlike his son, Cliven

Bundy has not called for the last occupiers to leave.

The Oregonian reported the Rev. Franklin Graham had spoken with the remaining occupiers.

Graham spokesman Todd Shearer told the newspaper that the religious leader had communicated by phone with the four occupiers and federal officials but Graham had "no comment" beyond that.

The last four occupiers had asked Graham to help them negotiate their departure. They have said they want assurances they won't be arrested.

Federal prosecutors are building a case against Ammon Bundy and his followers to show that the occupation was a threat to residents and federal employees. Prosecutors say the group, once numbering a couple dozen, was ready to use violence to hold on to the refuge.

The standoff also has created divisions among residents that will take time to heal. Many locals want the occupation to end and are eager to get on with their lives. But others sympathize with Bundy's complaints, which are part of a long-running dispute over federal management of public lands in the West.

Some have rallied in support and opposition to the standoff, the latter often citing the death of an Arizona rancher by police. Robert "LaVoy" Finicum was killed Jan. 26 during a confrontation with FBI agents and Oregon State Police on a remote road.

Federal authorities have released aerial video and said Finicum was going for a gun in his jacket pocket. Bundy's relatives say the shooting was not justified.

Pickleball: It originated in Seattle in the '60s

Seaside's Alice Lane provides coaching on behalf of the national pickleball group. She started playing pickleball about 12 years ago while visiting Palm Springs, California, and has been playing ever since.

Lane said the sport is easy to learn, "so much easier than tennis."

Lauren and Paul Fisher, of Seaside, who play tennis recreationally, agreed after playing for the first time.

"I thought it was great," Lauren Fisher said. "I think anybody could come in and have fun."

Pickleball provides a faster learning curve. Unlike tennis, where a person must play a lot before it becomes enjoyable, "you can have fun very quickly," she said.

Pickleball also is designed to be a social game, Lane said. With three courts, the Camp Rilea gymnasium is a good facility for a community program, she added. She also was given storage space in the building for the duration of the program.

What's in a name

Pickleball originated in the Seattle area in the 1960s. Joel Pritchard, a congressman at the time, and his friend Bill Bell wanted to play badminton with their two families, but they could not find enough equipment. They improvised, replacing the badminton rackets with wooden ping-pong paddles and using perforated plastic balls. With the help of Barney McCallum, the trio of friends created rules for their game.

There are two theories regarding the name's origin, and it is possible both are true. McCallum claimed the Pritchard family chose to name their newly invented game pickleball, because their cocker spaniel, Pickles, often ran off with the ball. Pritchard's wife, Joan, claimed she started "calling the game pickleball because 'the combination of different sports reminded me of the pickle boat in crew, where oarsmen were chosen from the leftovers of other boats,'" the website states.

The sport caught on in the community, among neighbors and friends. The USA Pickleball Association, organized in 1984, is now the official promoter and governing body for the game, which has experienced an increase in popularity over the past few years.

In pickleball, the ball is served underhand, without bouncing it from the court, and diagonally to the opponent's service zone.

Points are scored by the serving side only and occur when the opponent fails to return the ball or hits the ball out of bounds, also known as faults. The server continues to serve, alternating service courts, until the server faults.

A game is won by the first side to reach 11 points but will continue until won by a two-point margin.

Pickleball on the North Coast

The Seaside recreation district covers liability insurance for the program and Lane pays rent for the facility. Last summer, the district offered a few sessions of pickleball on Wednesday mornings for about a month at Seaside Heights Elementary School for people of all ages.

The district is always looking for ways to "engage the community more," especially during the winter months when outdoor activities are more difficult to provide, Fitness and Special Events Manager Grace Smith said. They decided to hold it on Saturdays this time to make it more accessible to those who work during the week.

The pickleball program was chosen because it is a good recreational activity for participants of many ages and something fairly new to the area, Smith said. Only one site in Seaside is listed on the national website as a place to play, and that is the Thousand Trails' Seaside RV Resort.

Lane said she believes offering pickleball programs and courts — which have the same dimensions as doubles badminton courts — will make this region even more of a destination area.

"The Oregon Coast already is a destination point and this will be another attraction," she said.

In order to increase the sport's presence in the area, "we would need people to come out and try it for the first time," Smith said. After people try it once, they are likely to play again, she added.

Balls and paddles are provided. The cost is $5 per person for three hours of play; only cash is accepted. Camp Rilea is located at 333168 Patriot Way in Warrenton.
