

Vigil: 'Jason, our love is with you and your family'

us," said Brian Taylor, Goodding's longtime friend.

While on duty, Goodding was shot by Phillip Ferry, who was being arrested on a felony-assault warrant. Goodding was taken to Providence Seaside Hospital and pronounced dead about 40 minutes later. Ferry, who was shot at the scene by another Seaside police officer, later died of his wounds, as well.

During the vigil, Taylor thanked the crowd for coming to remember "Jason Goodding: husband, father, police sergeant, coach, friend, son, mentor, role model," who was known for having a "crazy infectious smile."

During a time of great loss and sorrow such as this, Taylor said, "we want to do anything we can to help, but we feel helpless because we don't yet know how to provide meaningful assistance." He suggested looking for direction at none other than Goodding himself, who "was really good about helping people."

"When he did his job, whatever it was ... he did it the right way," Taylor said.

lost a wonderful police officer, but even more tragic was the loss of a wonderful person.

Besides his law enforcement work, Goodding helped coach several local sports teams. He guided young people, and "his mentorship was second to none," Taylor said.

Goodding's death has scarred the Seaside community and created a hole in many hearts and lives "that will never be filled," he said. However, the loss "at least can be honored."

"Coming together as a community like this, right now, sends a very powerful message," Taylor said. "We care about each other. We live for each other."

Goodding's wife, Amy, and his school-aged daughters, Joslyn and Jayden, in addition to Goodding's fellow Seaside officers, will need support now and in the future, Taylor said. Amy, a nurse at Providence Seaside Hospital, was at the vigil. At Taylor's encouragement, participants gave her a "shout-out," expressing their love and support.

silence in honor of Goodding's memory, in the glow of a sea of handheld candles, Taylor offered a prayer, asking God to help the community through this difficult time. He also shared a quote from Anne Frank's "The Diary of a Young Girl" that summed up Goodding's spirit.

"It's difficult in times like these: ideals, dreams and cherished hopes rise within us, only to be crushed by grim reality," Frank wrote. "It's a wonder I haven't abandoned all my ideals, they seem so impractical. Yet I cling to them because I still believe, in spite of everything, that people are truly good at heart."

"Jason, our love is with you and your family tonight and will always be before you," Taylor concluded. "I miss you. We miss you. We will meet again."

A memorial service for Goodding will be held at 1 p.m. Friday at the Seaside Civic and Convention Center. The public is invited to attend. Additional venues will be identified in case the convention center reaches capacity.

The service will be preceded by a law enforcement procession through Seaside, ending at the convention center. Details of the route will be announced later this week, along with potential overflow venues where the service will be broadcast.

People wishing to help support the Goodding family should make donations through the Oregon Fallen Badge Foundation at www.oregon-fallenbadge.com. Click on the "Donate to OFB" link on the home page and then enter "For the Goodding family" into the memo line of the Paypal donation page.

Goodding: He had a good relationship with Helping Hands Re-entry Outreach Centers

More than a person he collaborated and worked with, Goodding was "a true friend," Nilema said. When he saw Goodding, they often would talk about their shared interest in serving Seaside's residents.

"He was always telling, 'You know, Father Nick, we have to put our efforts together to help take care of our people,'" Nilema said.

As a law enforcement officer, Goodding also had a relationship with Helping Hands Re-entry Outreach Centers.

"He was a night sergeant and he really guaranteed the safety and the security of the shelter," said Jay Barber, a Seaside City Council member and board member for Helping Hands. "If there was any issue or concern, he was there like that."

Goodding made an effort to maintain communication and relationships with the people served at the organization's shelters, Chief Executive Officer Alan Evans said. He cared about them, like many of Seaside's officers.

"He made them feel like they were people," Evans said. "He really worked close with this population of people that are struggling in our community and he cared about them. That's what made him extra special, because he led by example."

Goodding saw the important link between the organization and law enforcement and believed they both were working toward the same goal of helping people in need, Evans said. Goodding liked to know everyone within the facility and build relationships with them, Evans said.

"I'm sure that helped him do his job well, and we're grateful for that," he said. "That's what community is about."

Barber said he cannot remember an incident like this happening in Seaside since he moved here. In a small community, where people often are on a first-name basis with the law enforcement officers, it can be unnerving.

"For something like this to happen, it's a real shock to our community," Barber said.

The important thing now, Barber said, is for people to "step up" and support the officer's family and friends.

"I'm hoping scholarship funds and financial support will just flow in from the community," he added.

Barber's wife, Jan, said Seaside is good about taking care of its own in times of trouble.

"This community is really and truly at its very best when there is any need within our group," she said. "It's incredible to me sometimes."

Even those who are struggling themselves will turn up for special events and fundraisers to support their fellow community members.

"Everyone just rises to take care of each other," Jan Barber said.

Goodding's death also highlights the importance of supporting the Seaside Police Department and the officers.

"We have the luxury of having a small community and because of the hearts of our police officers, it becomes a safe community, because of those relationships," Evans said.

What makes the Seaside community "so rare," he added, "is people like Jason," who love their job, care about people and try to foster good relationships.
