

Center: 'It was looking pretty shabby'

The $1.81 million renovation project closed the senior center two years ago and temporarily transplanted the center's activities to the Yacht Club on West Marine Drive, a move that led to a reduction in members. After repeated delays and design revisions, construction began in summer 2015 and wrapped up last month.

"It was looking pretty shabby, as you all know, and it was time for a facelift," Astoria Mayor Arline LaMear said after senior center Board President John Ryan's introduction.

The renovation features a commercial kitchen; LED lighting; a new roof and new windows; and an upgraded heating, ventilation and air conditioning system.

"I'm just really delighted with the results of this whole senior center, both as the mayor of Astoria and, perhaps more importantly, as a senior citizen myself," she said. "Our senior citizens have given hours, months and years of volunteer time to this community, and we appreciate that so much. I kind of think of this as a thank-you to our senior citizens, and I do mean that from the bottom of my heart."

Older Americans Act

Bonamici — an advocate for congressional funding of community block grants that pay for such projects — is working to reauthorize the Older Americans Act, which helps fund meals-on-wheels, community centers and elder-abuse prevention.

The congresswoman sits on the House Committee on Education and the Workforce, which is handling the legislation. The 1965 act was last reauthorized in 2006 and expired at the end of fiscal year 2011.

Though she can't predict a timeline for reauthorization, "We're really in the final steps," she said before the ribbon-cutting. "The chairman of the committee knows that it's a priority of mine, and I'm constantly reminding him and other colleagues about why it's important to reauthorize this program and keep it going, improve it and make it better."

"The next step is for the House to work with the Senate and come up with something that's going to go through both chambers," she said.

There is strong bipartisan support for making sure seniors have access to nutritional support and community centers, she said.

"A lot of it comes down to how much money is authorized," she said. "That's what we're currently discussing, and I hope we can reach something soon and get it through the process."

Bonamici told the audience that she's fighting back against proposals to make cuts in programs like Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid.

"Every day now in this country, about 10,000 people turn 65, and a lot of people have not planned adequately for retirement; so what we can do as policymakers to help people prepare for that is really important, in addition to not cutting Social Security."

the tsunami inundation zone.

"That's a pretty big task, to move schools," Bonamici said. "But it's something that we need to draw attention to, and I applaud you for your leadership and talking about that issue and how important it is."

In 2013, a $128.8 million bond measure to build a new campus was defeated by voters. Now Seaside's Associated Student Body leaders are spearheading a campaign, called Don't Catch This Wave, to raise tsunami awareness and school relocation funds. Superintendent Doug Dougherty also has said he will seek a new bond measure on the ballot this year.

In Congress, Bonamici sponsored the Tsunami Warning, Education and Research Act of 2015. The bill, which Bonamici said has bipartisan support and passed once in the House of Representatives, would do four things: create better tsunami warning systems; provide more assistance for tsunami preparation; improve coordination between different agencies dealing with tsunami science, technology and regional preparedness and provide more community support through outreach and education.

"I'm really proud of that bill," Bonamici said. "I'm working on getting it through the House again, because of the slight changes made in the Senate."

After Bonamici spoke, Associated Student Body co-Presidents Taylor Barnes and Whitney Westerholm and Treasurer Jesse Trott gave a presentation detailed the impending Cascadia Subduction Zone earthquake, anticipated to be at least a magnitude of 8.7, and the following tsunami, projected to bring surging water about 80 to 100 feet above sea level.

As part of the students' Don't Catch This Wave campaign, they are trying to raise $2 million to relocate the high school, Broadway Middle School and Seaside Heights Elementary School, in addition to spreading awareness about the importance of being prepared. On April 30, the students will partner with the city of Seaside for the Seaside Dash to Safety 5K Run/Walk and Safety Fair.

"What you are doing as students here at Seaside High School, raising awareness about this issue, is really important," Bonamici said. "Your leadership is being recognized, not only by me, but by others across the state."

Sheriff: Shooting could stay with young officer

Bergin said the focus of the policy debate should not be on more gun control, but rather on the short length of prison sentences and prison beds not being used.

He urged Gov. Kate Brown to consider the Seaside shooting before approving more justice reinvestment laws. "I hope she remembers what the real, true cost was," he said.

The justice reinvestment initiative, approved by the Legislature in 2013, was meant to address the increased growth of Oregon's prison rate and the rising costs of corrections.

The goals were to decrease prison population growth and reduce recidivism while also protecting public safety and holding criminals accountable. The initiative was part of a national prison-reform movement.

At the press conference Tuesday, the police officer who shot and killed Ferry was identified as David Davidson, a 28-year-old officer who has worked for Seaside Police since late 2012.

Davidson worked part-time as a reserve officer for the Clatsop County Sheriff's Office before joining Seaside Police. He is doing as well as can be expected, Bergin said, and was able to attend Gooding's memorial service.

"He is a young officer and to be affected this early in your career by such a traumatic incident is going to be something that he will have to carry the rest of his life," Bergin said.

The findings of the shooting investigation show Davidson was legally and morally justified in shooting Ferry. Before having to use his service weapon, Davidson first used a Taser when Ferry refused to show his hands.

Clatsop County District Attorney Josh Marquis described how traumatic a shooting can be for an officer.

"No police officer takes the use of deadly force or particularly the taking of another human life lightly," Marquis said. Marquis expressed the same concerns as the sheriff and Sen. Johnson.

"There are people in the Oregon Legislature who seem much more concerned about making sure people never go to prison or they get out as fast as possible," Marquis said. "I'm sure none of them ever wanted to see anybody like Ferry get out, but unfortunately records like his are all too common."

The public is welcome to the monthly meeting of the Tillicum Foundation Board of Directors.
