Brady suspension back on the table after Deflategate appeal

By LARRY NEUMEISTER and COLLEEN LONG
Associated Press

NEW YORK — New England Patriots quarterback Tom Brady could again be facing a four-game suspension for the scandal known as Deflategate after federal appeals court judges spent time Thursday shredding some of his union's favorite arguments for dismissal.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Manhattan gave a players' union lawyer a tough time, with Circuit Judge Denny Chin even saying evidence of ball tampering was "compelling, if not overwhelming," and there was evidence to support a finding that Brady "knew about it, consented to it, encouraged it."

"How do we as appellate judges reviewing an arbitrator's decision second-guess the four-game suspension?" Chin asked attorney Jeffrey Kessler of the NFL Players Association.

The appeals court did not immediately rule, but it seemed to lean heavily at times against the union's arguments, raising the prospect that the suspension Brady was supposed to start last September before a judge nullified it may begin next season instead.

The appeals panel seemed receptive to the NFL's argument that it was fair for Commissioner Roger Goodell to severely penalize one of the game's greatest quarterbacks after concluding he tarnished the game by impeding the league's investigation into deflated footballs, including destroying a cellphone containing nearly 10,000 messages. The league had concluded that deflated balls were used when the Patriots routed the Indianapolis Colts at the January 2015 AFC championship game before they went on to win the Super Bowl.

Judge Barrington D. Parker said the cellphone-destruction issue raised the stakes "from air in a football to compromising the integrity of a proceeding that the commissioner had convened."

"An adjudicator looking at these facts, it seems to me, might conclude that the cellphone had incriminating information on it and that, in the teeth of an investigation, it was deliberately destroyed," Parker said. "So why couldn't the commissioner suspend Mr. Brady for that conduct alone?"

"With all due respect, Mr. Brady's explanation of that made no sense whatsoever," Parker said.

Humber begins comeback bid for Padres in loss to Mariners

Mariners open spring training with two wins

By MIKE CRANSTON
Associated Press

PEORIA, Ariz. — Philip Humber began a comeback bid by throwing two scoreless innings for the San Diego Padres in a 6-5 loss to the Seattle Mariners on Thursday.

Facing the same club he threw a perfect game against four years ago, the 33-year-old right-hander retired his first three batters. He worked around two walks and Jesus Montero's single in the second.

After Humber's 2012 perfect game with the Chicago White Sox, his ERA soared to 7.90 a year later with Houston, his last big league season. He was cut from his South Korean team last year.

"One of the guys in the dugout when I got done said, 'You finally gave up a hit to the Mariners,'" Humber said. "I told him the sad thing is I've given up a lot of hits to the Tacoma Rainiers since that perfect game" — a reference to the Mariners' Triple-A farm team.

Nathan Karns allowed Cory Spangenberg's single and a walk in two scoreless innings in his Mariners spring training debut.

Luis Sardinas' consecutive two-run doubles in the fifth and sixth put Seattle ahead.

Alexei Ramirez had an RBI single off Joe Wieland in his first San Diego appearance, ending the Padres'

11-inning scoreless streak at the start of the exhibition season.

Wednesday: Mariners 7, Padres 0

Chris Iannetta hit a two-run homer in his spring training debut for the Seattle Mariners, who opened their exhibition schedule with a 7-0 win Wednesday over the San Diego Padres.

Seattle's Scott Servais and San Diego's Andy Green made their managerial debuts.
