

Search continues for missing fisherman

The Daily Astorian

The Clatsop County Sheriff's Office and dive teams from Clackamas and Multnomah counties are searching for Charles K. Kelly, 52, the fisherman who reportedly fell off a boat into the Youngs River Tuesday.

Sheriff Tom Bergin said the agencies are expanding their search downriver from the confluence of the Youngs and Klaskanine rivers, where Kelly was last seen fishing from a boat.

"We're going to do everything we can, in our power, to make sure Mr. Kelly is recovered," Bergin said.

The Sheriff's Office was dispatched Tuesday morning after a report of a boat circling in the river at full throttle without an operator. According to the Sheriff's Office, the person reporting said they had talked with Kelly — also known as Charles Hinkel — left and returned shortly thereafter to find the boat circling with nobody on board.

Seaside residents can dump household waste equipment, fax machines, satellite dishes and components, small appliances, yard debris and household garbage.

Items that will not be accepted include large appliances (washers, dryers, stoves, dishwashers, microwaves, copy machines, refrigerators and freezers), tires, motor oil, batteries, florescent bulbs, cleaners, paints, thinner, pesticides, automotive or boat fluids, solvents, light bulbs and rechargeable batteries.

Ledger, letters give glimpse into tribal past

By KATHY ANEY
East Oregonian

PENDLETON — Wes Potter loves to play detective with his own family history.

The Alaska man works to fill in all the blanks on his family tree and he cherishes family artifacts. Keeping one such heirloom, however, didn't feel right. In late March, Potter gave an old handwritten ledger once possessed by his great-grandfather to the Tamastlikt Cultural Institute.

To some, the ledger from the late 1800s might look like a dusty old notebook, but not to those who recognize its significance.

Potter's great-grandfather, Charles Wilkins Sr., served as an Indian agent. He was the man responsible for implementing federal Indian policy on the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation from 1897 to the early 1900s. A century later, Potter came into possession of a leather satchel belonging to his great-grandfather Wilkins. Inside was a register where various Indian agents had recorded in cursive every person in the tribe until 1892 and the allotment of land each had been assigned.

E.J. Harris/East Oregonian

Wes Potter looks on as Tamastlikt Director Roberta Conner thumbs through a ledger owned by his great-grandfather during his time as the Indian agent for the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation in the late 1800s. Potter donated the ledger and other historical items owned by his great-grandfather to the Tamastlikt Cultural Institute in Mission.

A census

In late March, Potter sat at a table in a Tamastlikt conference room and watched Tamastlikt Director Roberta Conner page gingerly through the ledger. Potter, a tall, bearded career Army officer who grew up on a ranch near Enterprise, smiled as Conner become absorbed in the book and explained what she was seeing.

"This is a census," Conner said. "What it shows us is that (in 1892) there are 393 Cayuses, 196 Umatillas and 455 Walla Wallas. That totals 1,043."

She explained that following the treaty of 1855, the federal government eventually broke the communally held reservation into individual allotments.

"This is the beginning of a system that dissects the reservation into small pieces of individual ownership," she said.

Allotments ranged in size, totaling either 40, 80 or 160 acres. The first name in the book is Philip Minthorn, a Cayuse known as Kash-Kash, who was 49 years old and had an allotment of 160 acres as head of household. Chief No Shirt headed the Walla Walla list. Moses Minthorn was the first Umatilla.

Conner said the tribe already has allotment information on a digitized map, but the ledger is a connection with history and those who have gone before.

"It's a big deal," she said of the allotment list. "We live with the consequences of it daily, but to see the handwriting and the notations and the names..."

She let the sentence drift off. Many of the names had been mangled by agents over the years, similar to the misspelling of the names of immigrants entering Ellis Island.

"They were written by those who had understanding of English, but not native languages," said Collections Curator Randall Melton, who also inspected the ledger. "They wrote down what they heard."

He said Wilkins likely inherited the ledger from agents who had come before him, but hadn't used it during his years at the post.

Aquatic Center wins award

The Daily Astorian

The Astoria Aquatic Center has announced that it has been awarded the Silver International Aquatic Safety Award.

The award demonstrates the aquatic facility consistently exceeded industry standards in risk management and epitomizes aquatic safety excellence. International Aquatic Safety Awards are made by Jeff Ellis & Associates Inc., international aquatic safety and risk management consultants.

"It is apparent that the entire staff embodies the idea of setting the standard in aquatic safety, and swimmers who frequent this aquatic facility are afforded the highest degree of swimmer protection currently available for the aquatic industry," Richard A. Carroll, Jeff Ellis & Associates Inc. senior vice president and chief operating officer, said in a statement.

Voters can meet candidates for countywide public offices

The Daily Astorian

WARRENTON — The public can meet with nonpartisan candidates running for countywide offices at a forum being held at 6:30 p.m. April 14 in the Warrenton High School cafeteria, 1700 S. Main Ave.

The audience will be able to submit written questions for the candidates at the event, which is being organized by the North Coast Republican Women.

Attending the forum are Clatsop County Commission Position 2 candidates, Sarah Nebeker and John Dunzer; and for Position 4, Kathleen Sullivan; and the three candidates running for judge of the Circuit Court, 18th District, Position 2, David Goldthorpe, Dawn McIntosh and Ronald Woltjer.

In the May 17 primary election, voters will be selecting one of the candidates running for judge to replace retiring Judge Philip Nelson, who was first elected in 1992.

In addition, Kathi Mattinen, the new Clatsop County Fair manager, is presenting information on Measure 4-178, a five-year local tax renewal for fair-ground operation.
