

Seaside: Director wants to highlight state's beauty

In choosing this area, Zalutsky said he wanted to "highlight the incredible beauty of Oregon, both on camera, and the uniqueness of the locations."

The director said he's received a "ton of help" from friends and family in the Portland area.

He wrote the script thinking of the Oregon Coast.

"Dangerous beauty" is a term that comes to mind," Zalutsky said. "The elements are very extreme, and you're not protected like you are in New York or Portland. You see that everywhere you look — the incredible surf, the rocks, the cliffs, the trees."

'Hamilton' star

Zalutsky's script tells the story of "Daphne," played by DeBose, whose boyfriend inherits his childhood beach house. The couple move from Portland to the coast to start fresh and have a family. When they run into "Susanna," a troubled local woman in Seaside (played by Oregonian Steffanie Leigh), Daphne discovers that Roger has been less than honest about his romantic past, and Daphne must fight, not just for her relationship, but for her own survival.

DeBose was fascinated with the character after reading the script and meeting with Zalutsky.

Daphne has "a lot of different circumstances in her life, taking care of their mother, who's single with a disability and desperately taking care of her boyfriend," DeBose said Wednesday from Portland. "It feels like the world is throwing all different punches at her. It's very rare to come across something like this, for me to have this opportunity."

It's been a "very long time" since she's performed a dramatic role, DeBose said, and she relished the "dark tone" of the script.

"I specialize in musicals that are fun-loving," she said. "This is my first feature film, and an exciting one at that."

DeBose is on a leave of absence from the cast of "Hamilton," which she will resume after shooting "Seaside."

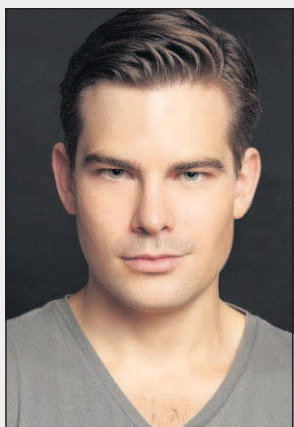

The off-Broadway production of "Hamilton" won the 2015 Drama Desk award for outstanding musical, as well as seven other Drama Desk awards. The Broadway play won a Grammy award and is

writer-director

a leading contender for "Best Musical" at the Tony awards in June.

What is it like to be a part of the planet's hottest theatrical production, the story of Founding Father Alexander Hamilton?

"It's amazing," DeBose said. "Hamilton" is one of those dream shows no one ever really saw coming. For an artist, it's a once in a lifetime thing."

She added, "You don't see many shows that have a big fan in the president."

On location

Working with the city of Seaside has been "incredible," Zalutsky said.

Film locations include the convention center, Funland and the old Lutheran church.

Visitors Center Assistant General Manager Jon Rahl and staff member Nicole Bailey "were super-helpful," Zalutsky said, embracing the project.

"We couldn't have done it without them," he said. "They've helped us connect with so many businesses. It's really fun to have people be so excited about it. It's kind of a dream come true."

As he begins shooting, the specter of another film shot in the vicinity, Steven Spielberg's "Goonies," always looms.

"'Goonies,' I don't know if I ever saw it," Zalutsky admitted. "But wherever you point the camera it's going to be an interesting view. So you can't lose."

So long, suckers! Inky the octopus makes an amazing escape

Clever critter squeezes down the drain to the Pacific Ocean

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — Inky the octopus waited until it was dark and the staff had gone home from the National Aquarium of New Zealand before making his move.

He squeezed and pushed his way through a tiny gap in the mesh at the top of his tank and slithered 6.6 feet to the floor. Then he made a beeline across the room to a drain hole.

With a body the size of a rugby ball, Inky managed to stretch out and squeeze into the hole. From there, he shimmed down the 164-foot pipe until he was back in the Pacific Ocean.

All he left behind three months ago was a slimy trail, allowing staff at the Napier aquarium to re-create his amazing escape.

He's not been seen since.

Inky's story begins on Pania Reef, several hundred yards out to sea from the aquarium. He was pulled up by a fisherman in a lobster pot and wasn't in good shape. He'd been attacked, probably by a snapper or some other fish, and a couple of his tentacles were half their normal length.

After a year recuperating at the National Aquarium, said manager Rob Yarrall, Inky was once again in good health. And he'd been delighting the staff with his intelligence.

"He used to come up and you could hand-feed him," Yarrall said. "He'd grab hold of you with the suckers on his tentacles, or squirt water at you. And he worked out how to screw the top off a jar."

Yarrall said that since they have no bones, octopuses can squeeze through almost any hole that's larger than their beaks, so the drain hole, 6 inches wide, was no great challenge.
