Local artists invited to work with recycled material

The Daily Astorian

Astoria Visual Arts and Recology Western Oregon have created the Coastal Oregon Artist Residency, which will provide local artists the chance to make pieces from recycled, repurposed and discarded materials recovered from the Astoria Recycling Depot and Transfer Station.

The project is meant to encourage people to conserve natural resources and promote new ways of thinking about art and the environment.

Each three-month residency will provide access to discarded materials, a stipend of $400 per month and a large studio space at the recycling center. During their residencies, artists will have week-day scavenging privileges and access to the studio.

Astoria Visual Arts and Recology Western will host a reception and public exhibition featuring artwork made during their residencies. When they end, each artist will be asked to contribute one piece of artwork to the program's permanent collection.

The residency is open to local, career-level artists in Clatsop and Tillamook counties, along with Wahkiakum County in Washington, who are working in any style or medium. Applications are open for the two inaugural residencies, which start July 11. For more information, visit astoriavisualarts.org
