

School board selects new food services director

Kelly is a Coast Guard veteran

The Astoria School Board approved a new contract Wednesday with Michael Kelly to be the district's new food services director.

Kelly, from Hammond, will oversee the district's first autonomous food service program in 20 years.

The school board voted at its last meeting to not renew a contract with Chartwells, a Vancouver, Washington-based food service provider.

Board members and Superintendent Craig Hoppes shared their concerns over a lack of communication and inconsistencies with food being served. Chartwells still has contracts with the Warrenton-Hammond and Seaside school districts.

Kelly's experience with food service comes from 27 years in the U.S. Coast Guard, from which he earned vocational certificates in culinary arts, cooking and food service management.

Kelly will receive a two-year contract with a $55,000 annual salary. He will oversee four cafeterias.

Kelly retires from the Coast Guard in June and starts with the district in July.

Hoppes said Kelly will then start creating menus that meet state nutritional standards.

In other school district news:

- Chad Madsen, the former vice principal of Astoria High School, will return next year as a math teacher. Madsen left last year to be principal of Hilltop School, part of the Ocean Beach School District in Pacific County, Washington, but said he wants to get back into the classroom.

- Ryan Hahn, the district's transportation director, will leave this summer for the same position in the North Clackamas School District. Hahn said the move will help him be closer to George Fox University in Newberg, where he commutes in pursuit of his master's degree, and to his mother Marcia Hahn, who starts next year as transportation director for the Estacada School District.

- Clint Hill, an English teacher and faculty adviser for the Astor Post, is leaving this summer for a position at Patrick Henry High School in Roanoke, Virginia. Hill taught for 14 years at Astoria High School, including 13 different courses, according to the Astor Post.

Coast Guard ends oversight of Privateer salvage operation

No recoverable fuel found on board fishing vessel

The Daily Astorian

OCEAN SHORES, Wash. — The U.S. Coast Guard has concluded its oversight of a salvage operation of the fishing vessel Privateer after finding no recoverable fuel on board.

The fishing vessel ran aground in April after the Coast Guard rescued three men from the vessel outside Grays Harbor after it started sinking. The investigation into the incident is still underway.

The Coast Guard's Incident Management Division and Washington Department of Ecology have been monitoring the situation the past several weeks. Salvage has been impeded by the location of the Privateer in breaking surf and weather conditions.

The Privateer's owner reported the vessel had a maximum capacity of 6,000 gallons of diesel fuel, but it was unknown how much was aboard at the time of the incident. The smell of diesel has been reported in the area, but no sheen has been sighted.

Wednesday's attempt at moving the vessel did not work. The salvage operation will continue under the direction of Department of Ecology and Washington State Parks.
