Jazz Society, high-schoolers make music together

By R.J. MARX
The Daily Astorian

Passing the torch from "old to young" is among the missions of the Lighthouse Jazz Society. Once again they are showing support with donations to Seaside High School's aspiring musicians.

"That was a huge surprise," Seaside High School Band Director Terry Dahlgren said. "This will go for music and making the bands go, which is extraordinarily helpful."
The society's sponsorship of the annual Seaside Jazz Festival brings renowned performers and fans together for a long weekend in February.
It also puts Seaside High School's young musicians onstage.
"We've had a great relationship with the jazz society," Dahlgren said. "The jazz band has played there before, and we've continued it through the years, back when it was called the Dixieland Festival."
Based in Seaside since 1992, the Lighthouse Jazz Society is devoted to traditional jazz and the many genres that have developed from it.
They provide scholarships from a raffle at the jazz fest, this year bringing in more than $2,000.
In February, the jazz band took the stage at the Seaside Jazz Festival, presented by the Lighthouse Jazz Society.
