

Music in the Gardens puts on 10th annual garden tour

LONG BEACH PENINSULA, Wash. — Enjoy a summer day by touring private gardens on Washington's Long Beach Peninsula. Music in the Gardens will hold its 10th annual Long Beach Peninsula Garden Tour from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, July 16.

Seven beautiful gardens of local area residents will be on display. Each venue will provide an opportunity to talk one-on-one with the gardeners and discover their planting and growing secrets. Relax with hors d'oeuvres and refreshments as you tour the grounds while listening live music.

Gardens this year include a potted flower garden in deep Seaview, as well as a classic and traditional garden in Long Beach. Ocean Park gardens feature a Willapa Bay estate with ponds, waterfalls, flowers, edibles, berries and chickens; a 1910 beach cottage built on a 25-foot-wide lot densely packed with ornamentals and edibles; and an artists' garden with handmade pots, bird baths and walkways. Continuing in Ocean Park is an award-winning bed and breakfast with a variety of gardens and a Klipsan Beach garden filled with a variety of plants focusing on texture, color and foliage, all passions of the owners.

Local peninsula musicians will be Barbara Bate, Brian O'Connor, The Mozart Chicks and Tom Trudell. Acustica World Music of Astoria will perform at a bay side garden. Terry Robb and The Winterlings will be com-

Explore the land with North Coast Land Conservancy

CLOVERDALE, CANNON BEACH and SEASIDE — More of North Coast Land Conservancy's free summer On the Land outings are coming up. Advanced registration is required for these guided walks on NCLC property.

You can take a free guided 1.5-mile loop walk on Whalen Island, an upland in the middle of Sand Lake estuary, from 10 a.m. to noon Wednesday, July 27.

Sand Lake, in southern Tillamook County, is considered Oregon's best-conserved estuary, thanks to the efforts by the state of Oregon and private land trusts including NCLC, which owns and manages 215 acres in the northeast corner of the estuary. Learn about the ecology at this bar-built estuary — one of only four on the Oregon Coast — and experience for yourself this unique and unusually undeveloped estuary.

The walk will be led by two staff members from North Coast Land Conservancy: Communications Coordinator

Biologist and educator Mike Patterson will lead a walk into Ecola Creek Forest Reserve July 29.

(and author of "Day Hiking: Oregon Coast") Bonnie Henderson and Development Director (and former Tillamook County kayak outfitter) Lorraine Ortiz. Sand Lake is about a half-hour drive south of Tillamook or 1.5 hours south of Seaside.

NCLC is also offering two ways to experience a recovering coastal rainforest, guided by expert naturalists.

On Friday morning July 29, biologist and educator Mike Patterson will lead a 2-mile round-trip walk into Ecola Creek Forest Reserve in Cannon Beach. The land conservancy helped the city of Cannon Beach acquire what has become a 1,040-acre community forest, preserving much of the Ecola Creek watershed. With his keen eye and ear, Patterson will help you spot birds and identify and better understand the trees and other plants and animals that characterize this recovering forest.

The following Friday morning, Aug. 5, naturalist

Naturalist and photographer Neal Maine will lead an outing Aug. 5 at Circle Creek Habitat Reserve.

Neal Maine will lead what he calls a "Seaton Watch" at Circle Creek Habitat Reserve. A Seaton Watch is an opportunity to slow down and simply observe the natural world with all your senses. The two-hour outing will follow a 0.8-mile nature trail through a Sitka spruce swamp at the edge of this 365-acre conservation area at the south end of Seaside.
