

Providence Seaside Hospital Caring for North Coast Communities

On Dec. 6, 1856, five Sisters of Providence crossed the stormy Columbia River into the Pacific Northwest to answer a call for help from a new pioneering community. What the Sisters found were many communities in need of service. Through collaboration with like-minded partners, their vision grew to a five-state health system with ministries in Oregon, Washington, Alaska, Montana and California.

Since then, two remarkable organizations with rich heritages have formed a partnership in order to serve more communities. On July 6, 2016, Providence Health & Services merged with St. Joseph Health, founded by the Sisters of St. Joseph of Orange more than a century ago. With support from 106,000-plus employees, known as caregivers, Providence St. Joseph Health reaches more people through health and social services offered at 50 hospitals and 829 clinics across seven states, including Texas and New Mexico.

As part of this network, Providence Seaside Hospital and clinics, established 35 years ago, continue the tradition of caring that the Sisters of St. Joseph and the Sisters of Providence began 160 years ago. The cornerstone of our Mission is to provide compassionate care that is accessible for all, especially the poor and vulnerable.
