

CERT: Participants will take part in drill at end of training showed up, traffic was moving," he said. "My training kicked in."

From directing Sandcastle Day beach parking (no small feat) to assisting in a search and rescue for a missing person, Cannon Beach CERT members, a ready and organized team of disaster volunteer workers, have used their training in numerous ways this year. Volunteers also help with large storms and train for a possible earthquake and tsunami, since emergency services personnel will need backup after "the big one."

Participants are trained on preparedness, area hazards, fire safety, teamwork, basic disaster medical skills and search and rescue activities. At the end of training, response team participants perform the skills they have learned in a drill, that involves helping "victims" made up to look like they have injuries.

Instructors include Cannon Beach Police Chief Jason Schermerhorn, Clatsop County Emergency Manager Tiffany Brown, and facilitators from Cannon Beach Rural Fire Protection District and Pacific Power.

After taking the four class sessions required to be certified, CERT members can choose to take ongoing classes. There is no fee for the training, and no prior experience or training is necessary. Each participant receives a backpack with emergency preparedness tools, including a vest, helmet and basic medical supplies.

"One of our goals is to get as many members as possible," CERT coordinator Paula Vetter said. "In an emergency situation, the more people who are trained with CERT training, the better off the entire community will be."

She hopes one person from each business will undergo the training.

Currently comprised of 34 members, CERT coordinates with nearby teams and the Cannon Beach Medical Reserve Corps, which has volunteers with medical and public health backgrounds. The city's goal is to have 100 response team members and 25 reserve corps members by the end of 2018.

"A lot of people recognize CERT now and understand what CERT is," Vetter said. "It's a way for more people in the community to have at least some background and experience."

Volunteers feel safe

"CERT prepares people for any emergency, whether you're hiking, playing a sport or doing any activity," response team member Silvia Avila said. "It's fun and can be applied to a lot of different situations."

Growing up in Cannon Beach and being aware of the Cascadia subduction zone motivated Avila to join CERT. She became certified when she was a Seaside High School student.

"We would rotate every other week between class lessons and hands-on activities," she said. "The final simulation at the end was very realistic."

Avila's training led her to start an official CERT club at Seaside High, and as a Cannon Beach volunteer firefighter, she applied her CERT training to fire rescue training.

Diak had "a blast" walking the Fourth of July parade with other response team members, leading a catchy chant and earning the designation "Captain Parade" for his enthusiasm.

"It's been amazing to be part of the team, get to learn who is who, and be a part of things you never thought you'd be a part of," he said.

and assault. All the harassment or attempted harassment charges involve "offensive physical contact with intimate parts," Haroldson said, adding that the charges are either Class A or Class B misdemeanors.

He said the incidents involved at least 11 alleged victims, all freshmen.

Attempted harassment is a Class B misdemeanor, which carries a maximum sentence of six months in detention. The charges of harassment, fourth-degree assault and second-degree criminal mistreatment are all Class A misdemeanors, which carry a sentence of up to one year in detention.

Haroldson said the assault and harassment charges involve allegations "wherein underclassmen's intimate areas were aggressively targeted as a form of initiation."

"The charges involve contact with the anus or anal area (or) aggressive contact with the testicles," he said, adding that one of the alleged victims was involved in two incidents in which he was grabbed and held down.

A total of 35 Philomath players participated in a summer camp at Camp Rilea near Warrenton in July.

In juvenile proceedings, jurisdiction for the youths lies in either the county where the youth resides or the county in which the alleged act was committed. In this case, Haroldson said all suspects, witnesses and victims live in Benton County. After conferring with Clatsop County District Attorney Josh Marquis, Haroldson said they agreed that the Benton County District Attorney's Office would file the juvenile delinquency petitions in Benton County Juvenile Court.

The Benton County District Attorney's Office will serve as special prosecutor in the case filed against Kikuta, although that case is scheduled to be heard in Clatsop County Circuit Court.

Kikuta is accused of having "assumed responsibility for the supervision of the players and withholding necessary and adequate physical care for those who were targeted in his presence," Haroldson said.

"One of the critical points here is ensuring that we're not continuing to have hazing in this football program," Haroldson said. "It ends now."

Additional charges may be coming in the case, Haroldson said. "At the end of the day, parents should be able to count on their kids going to school, or going to school programs, without having to be violated in their most intimate parts," Haroldson said. "And that goes to the issue of supervision."

District responds

In a statement issued after Haroldson's announcement, Melissa Goff, the superintendent of the Philomath School District, said the district "will take appropriate actions toward coaching staff and students where justified and continue the healing process for affected students and their families."

"We condemn all forms of hazing, harassment, and physical, mental, or emotional abuse," the statement said.

"Our first priority at all times is the safety of our students," Goff said in the statement. "We take hazing and bullying issues very seriously, and we have no tolerance whatsoever for the type of allegations raised in this investigation."

The district has canceled its first three football games, through Sept. 16. District officials say they are continuing to assess if, or when, the varsity team will begin competing.
