Fairweather House and Gallery

612 Broadway

This month sees the opening reception for the exhibition "Drama in Art." It's no exaggeration to say that what's happening outside with the seasonal colors mirrors what's arriving from regional artists.

For featured artist Jo Pomeroy-Crockett, nature is filled with incredible drama. Consider the universe: nebulae such as the Eagle Nebula, located hundreds of light years away, can be seen with the naked eye. The beautiful Butterfly Nebula is only 50 light years away and is as graceful as a poem. "I am totally intrigued by the color and the mystery of the infinite," she says.

Jan Shield, professor emeritus of art at Pacific University, will show his raku art that was created at Dancing Trees Sanctuary. "It is my home, studio and forest preserve in Newberg," he says. "It is an environment of thick fir and maple forest blanketed with lush ferns and punctuated with sunlit meadows."

Find paintings by Renee Rowe, who for many years directed art galleries in the Denver area and who relocated to the North Coast recently. Also find new resin work by Seaside photographer Linda Fenton-Mendenhall. Artist Paul Brent will offer a watercolor painting demonstration, his 2016 fall finale. Rowe will also offer an impasto oil painting demonstration. Enjoy light refreshments, live music by Shirley 88 and patron gifts.
