Washington judge fines food group over 2013 GMO fight

Civil penalty of $18 million

By PHOUNG LE and RACHEL LA CORTE
Associated Press

SEATTLE — The Grocery Manufacturers Association must pay $18 million in civil fines for concealing the true sources of contributions received from food companies to oppose a 2013 food labeling initiative, a Washington state judge ruled Wednesday.

Thurston County Superior Court Judge Anne Hirsch found that the Washington D.C.-based food industry group "intentionally violated" state campaign finance disclosure laws in its efforts to oppose Initiative 522.

Because the judge found that group intentionally violated the law, her civil penalty of $6 million will be tripled to $18 million. The Attorney General's Office said it's believed to be the largest campaign finance penalty in U.S. history.

The Grocery Manufacturers Association, which collected money from the nation's top food and beverage companies, along with five corporations, raised $22 million to defeat the ballot measure, which would have required labeling of genetically modified foods in the state. Voters narrowly rejected the proposal in the state's costliest initiative fight.

"I took this case to trial because the GMA needed to be held accountable for their arrogance and willful disregard of Washington state campaign finance laws," Washington Attorney General Bob Ferguson said in a statement Wednesday.

The Grocery Manufacturers Association said it "intends to vigorously pursue its legal options to correct this injustice."

"GMA believes that there is no basis in law or fact to support this unprecedented, inequitable and clearly excessive penalty - nearly 18 times higher than any other Washington State public disclosure fine," the group said in an emailed statement Wednesday.

It said its decision not to disclose member companies that contributed to the Non 522 campaign "was at most an inadvertent technical violation of the State's vague and complex disclosure law." The group lashed out against Ferguson, saying his "continuing crusade against GMA has been a centerpiece of his fundraising appeals and re-election effort."
