

Owners of crab boat that sank near Ilwaco fined

The Daily News

Washington state has levied a $10,500 fine against the owners of a crab boat that crashed into Jetty A and sank near Ilwaco two years ago.

The owners of the Titan also must reimburse the state $8,000 for response costs.

The 78-foot ship was on its maiden fishing voyage on Dec. 5, 2014, when it struck the jetty and its engine room flooded, according to the state Department of Ecology. The vessel sank with 4,600 gallons of oil and fuel aboard. An oil sheen coated the Columbia River for three days.

The Coast Guard rescued five crew members aboard at about 3 a.m. that day, but they left the vessel after securing it to the jetty. Later, harsh weather, strong currents and changing tides prevented crews from salvaging the ship in three separate attempts.

"Safety was a huge factor in this response" said David Byers, response section manager. "A series of storms hampered our ability to salvage the vessel without putting our responders at risk."

The Titan reportedly was carrying up to 50,000 pounds of Dungeness crab when it sunk.

Ecology and several state agencies plan to conduct a full natural resources damage assessment.

A plan to help the disabled prepare for the future

Partnerships aid student transition

By KATHERINE LACAZE
For The Daily Astorian

SEASIDE — New community partnerships will help the Seaside School District better provide students with intellectual and developmental disabilities the life skills to support a smooth transition to adulthood.

For many years, the school district has offered post-secondary transition services that include individual educational plans outlining the special education services a child identified with a disability will receive as part of his or her free and appropriate education, according to Jeremy Catt, director of special services.

"Our focus is on college and career readiness for all students, including students with disabilities," he said. "The goal is to have a plan for their future as they leave school."

This year, a main focus for the post-secondary transition program — which prepares students to move from high school to adult life utilizing comprehensive planning and coordinated activities — is to include more collaboration with outside agencies and community participation, Catt said.

"We want to continue this development of partnerships," which provide for integrated employment and job skills development opportunities, he added.

Those partnerships include agencies such as Vocational Rehabilitation, Youth Transition Program,

Employment First, Disability Rights Oregon, Families and Communities Together and the local transition network facilitator.

Setting high expectations

The statewide priorities for implementing post-secondary transition programs, according to Catt, are to decrease the number of students with developmental and intellectual disabilities who leave high school without a diploma and to increase employment training and vocational experiences during school that lead to better post-school outcomes.

"We need high expectations; we know high expectations lead to greater outcomes," he said.

Currently, transition planning is required to begin for each impacted student starting at age 16. Services are offered until the student turns 21, "with the end result that it's a seamless transition to adulthood," Catt said.

The initial process of developing a transition plan explores the student's post-secondary goals — whether they include the military, further education or entering the workforce — and what transition services and course study they need to meet those goals.

"It's a very comprehensive process, and we take this part of our IEPs very seriously," Catt said at the September district board meeting. "It's very individualized on what the student wants to do and what they're able to do."
