

Warrenton: Center has a bed, clean clothes, shower, toiletries available

average is three to five, Jackson-Shumaker, the operations manager, said.

"We don't know why they're (homeless), but I just think we need to show 'em we care," she said. "And that's why we're here, is to provide that to them."

Jackson-Shumaker added: "A lot of times, they just want somebody to talk to when they come in."

Volunteer shortage

The Warrenton Warming Center provides donated meals — often soup, bread and sides for dinner; eggs, coffee and other cooked offerings for breakfast — prepared in the church's commercial kitchen.

"We try to give them a good breakfast ... because we don't know if they're going to be eating the rest of the day," Jackson-Shumaker said.

A shower, toiletries, clean clothes and a mattress with fresh bedding to sleep on are also available. Some volunteers offer to wash visitors' laundry at a nearby laundromat in their spare time.

"The only limitations we've had so far is not being able to fill all slots due to volunteer shortage," Darlene Warren, the board chair, said.

The shortage means Warrenton organizers must decide, on a daily basis, whether the shelter will open that night. Potential visitors, aware that the center is a hit-or-miss destination, may decide to look elsewhere to sleep. In particular, the center is having a hard time filling the early morning shifts.

The homeless "need to be able to count on us," Jackson-Shumaker said. "And if we don't have volunteers, then it's not making us that stable."

The warming center needs more donations of food and clothing, including denim jeans, sweatpants and winter coats. But it also needs more money to help pay their portion of the church's utility bills, Darlene Warren said.

Take naught for granted

Though many people who turn up at the Warrenton location fit the profile of an addict, some have simply had trouble finding housing, or somehow ended up between jobs, Darlene Warren said.

"We're getting more and more families and people living in their cars. They're learning that they have a place to come get a hot meal and a shower," she said. "So they'll come do that, and then they'll go sleep in their car."

Two homeless people — one who was removed from a domestic violence situation — have brought young children.

A regular named John, who has lived in the region for about three years, said that what he likes about the Warrenton shelter is that "it's quiet."

"You got good people that really care, and they're putting it out there," he said.

John chose not to explain how he became homeless. But, he said, "Don't take anything for granted. Too many people in this world today take things for granted."

He was playing chess with another man, decades younger, who had brought his dog and arrived wearing basketball shorts on a night with freezing temperatures. He asked Jackson-Shumaker for some sweatpants.

Lopez: Has to register as a sex offender

Judge Nelson, struck by Lopez's lack of empathy for his victims, declined. "It's time to start serving that sentence," the judge said.

Lopez was handcuffed and taken away. But the 61-year-old Astoria man did not serve 80 days in jail. He was released.

Jailers, following the court's instructions, gave Lopez credit for the time he served for his previous crimes.

The District Attorney's Office has now gone back to Circuit Court to try to honor the intent of Judge Nelson's sentence. "It was clear the judge wanted him to do separate jail time for these victims, and he wasn't getting it," said Chief Deputy District Attorney Ron Brown, who filed a motion on Tuesday to modify the judgment against Lopez.

Court records outlining Lopez's sentence show that he was listed as eligible for credit for time served. "The jail is just abiding by that court order," said Lt. Kristen Hanthorn of the county's parole and probation division.

Lopez was in jail, serving a one-year sentence for harassing eight patients, when the new charges were filed in 2014 and he was arraigned in 2015. Lopez accumulated credit while he was in custody, but Brown said the time he served for his previous crimes should not count toward Judge Nelson's sentence.

"Hopefully, it's going to be a pretty easy one to correct," Brown said. "Because otherwise, he doesn't serve any jail time for these four victims at all."

Steven Sherlag, a Portland attorney who represents Lopez, said he will oppose the prosecutor's motion. "We don't believe the court has any jurisdiction to reconsider anything," he said. "The judge has already ruled."

Prosecutors were disappointed that Lopez's behavior was a misdemeanor under state law.

Lopez, who practiced in Warrenton, pleaded guilty to harassment in 2014 after he admitted to touching eight patients during appointments. He was sentenced to one year in jail and five years probation.

Four more women came forward, and Lopez was convicted in November of third-degree sexual abuse. He was sentenced in December to 180 days in jail — with a minimum of 80 days in custody — and five years probation.

He had faced a year in jail on each of the sexual abuse counts, but the courts have recognized that jail overcrowding often makes such sentences impractical.

Lopez, who lost his chiropractor's license, has to register as a sex offender for life.

'Obama Out': President ends reign as pop king

By NANCY BENAC
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — From his campaign fist bump to his theatrical mic drop at the last White House correspondents' dinner, Barack Obama ruled as America's pop culture president.

His two terms played out like a running chronicle of the trends of our times: slow-jamming the news with Jimmy Fallon, reading mean tweets with Jimmy Kimmel, filling out his NCAA basketball bracket on ESPN, cruising with Jerry Seinfeld on "Comedians in Cars Getting Coffee."

"I'm appreciably cooler than I was two minutes ago," Obama declared after taking the wheel of a 1963 Corvette Stingray with Seinfeld in 2015.

And, months before the end of his term, he delivered what could be his with-it farewell line as he ended his remarks at the correspondents' dinner by embracing a gesture popularized by rappers and comedians.

"Obama out," he dead-panned, as he dropped his microphone and left the lectern.

Michelle Obama matched the president on-trend moment for on-trend moment: She strapped on a seatbelt for "Carpool Karaoke" with James Corden, beat Ellen DeGeneres in a push-ups contest and rapped with a turnip.

It wasn't just frivolity. In an increasingly fragmented media world, the Obamas turned niche pop culture platforms to serious ends.

There he was in Alaska, warning about the dangers of climate change on "Running Wild with Bear Grylls." There she was on the "Tonight Show," pushing exercise by challenging Fallon to a sack race in the East Room.

The president turned up on "Between Two Ferns with Zach Galifianakis" to get millennials to sign up for his health care law.

"OK, let's get this out of the way, what did you come here to plug?" Galifianakis grouched.

"I think it's fair to say that I wouldn't be with you here today if I didn't have something to plug," Obama shot back. "Have you heard of the Affordable Care Act?"

Some conservatives called that appearance undignified. But within days, it had snagged 18 million views, on par with Justin Bieber. And health care signups ticked upward.

The president tossed a "Mad Men" reference into his 2014 State of the Union address — calling out wage disparities between men and women — and Twitter went wild.

He paid a 2015 house call to comic Marc Maron's garage in California to talk terrorism, racial politics and gun control on Maron's "WTF" podcast.
