Swim with salmon at Listening to the Land

SEASIDE — For nearly 20 years, the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife has been closely monitoring the survival and downstream migration of salmon in coastal river basins. As the assistant project leader of the Salmonid Life Cycle Monitoring Project, Derek Wiley has spent the past decade researching salmon and steelhead and making estimates about their abundance and survival rates on the northern Oregon coast, often taking his GoPro camera into the field with him to capture fish behavior and spawning.

Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife biologist Derek Wiley will talk about salmon Feb. 15 at the Seaside library.

On Wednesday, Feb. 15, join Wiley at the Seaside Public Library for the second of this year's free Listening to the Land presentations focused on wildlife, "Life in the River."

Wiley will provide a screening of his films documenting the freshwater life of native salmon in the region. "Journey's End" is an 18-minute video capturing underwater behavior and spawning of wild chum salmon, Chinook salmon, coho salmon, and Pacific lamprey in several rivers on the North Oregon Coast.

Wiley will also share footage documenting Salmonid Life Cycle Monitoring Project activities on the North Fork Nehalem River from fall 2015 and give an update on recent results.

As a research biologist with ODFW, Wiley supervises a field crew responsible for monitoring adult and juvenile salmonids in the North Fork Nehalem River for the Salmonid Life Cycle Monitoring Project. He earned a bachelor's degree in biology from Towson State University and a master's degree in fisheries and wildlife from Frostburg State University, both in Maryland. In 2004 he moved to John Day to work for ODFW on a steelhead research project. Two years later he moved to Tillamook to take his current position. Wiley is an avid fly fisherman, photographer and videographer.

Listening to the Land is a monthly winter speaker series offered January through May and presented by North Coast Land Conservancy and the Necanicum Watershed Council in partnership with the Seaside library.

On the Rocks to perform in Clatskanie

CLATAKANIE — As part of its 28th Performing Arts Series, the Clatskanie Arts Commission will present the University of Oregon's male a cappella group On the Rocks in concert at 7:30 p.m. Friday, Feb. 10 at Clatskanie's Birkenfeld Theatre, located at 75 S. Nehalem St.

On The Rocks was founded in 1999 by Leo DaSilva and Peter Hollens when they attended the University of Oregon. The group established itself through five albums, a viral video of Lady Gaga's "Bad Romance," and appearances on NBC's "The Sing Off."

Now they are a new group of 12 living up to their past of fame and notoriety. You may ask, "Why don't you sing Lady Gaga?" or "Where are the guys from the 'Sing Off'?"

Those singers have graduated — but talent never graduates. Talent built this group from a time before the boom of reality TV shows and viral videos. Know this: Every time On the Rocks performs, the group steps on stage with the vigor of every man who has ever sung in

On the Rocks.

Tickets cost $18 for adults, $16 for seniors and $14 for children age 12 and under. Tickets are available at Hump's Restaurant in Clatskanie, by calling Elsa at 503-728-3403 and at the ticket booth that opens at 7 p.m. the night of the performance. Only cash or check will be accepted. The theater holds 165 audience members, so be sure you get your tickets soon.

Also, mark your calendar for Feb. 24, for the rescheduled performance of South American group Condor.
