Research: Once trial program is complete, funding will be decided

Sex offenders assessed at medium- to high-risk can opt to join the classes as part of their probation and postprison supervision agreements, one of several treatment options for convicted offenders in Clatsop County.

Powell has overseen treatment programs for 12 years at the Sheriff's Office, but the cognitive behavioral intervention classes began in February 2016. The curriculum centers on avoiding thoughts, feelings and behaviors that may lead to sexual offenses. Participants complete homework prior to each week's meeting, discuss it and participate in simulations of real-life scenarios that may lead to new crimes.

"They're pretty engaged in the program," Sgt. Traci Hubler said. "It's really helped with the maturity of some of these people."

Part of national research

Powell and Hubler spent three days in December 2015 learning from researchers at the University of Cincinnati, who have taught the curriculum to agencies from 10 counties across the country. Being one of the smaller counties in the program, Clatsop County's experience with the trial can differ from others.

'It's really helped with the maturity of some of these people.'

Sqt. Traci Hubler

"We'll have different struggles than others may have and we also know the patients better," Powell said.

Powell and other social workers throughout the country have made certain recommendations to the University of Cincinnati researchers. The Sheriff's Office switched from three one-hour sessions per week to just the one 90-minute meeting, for instance. The alteration allows participants to absorb information at a slower pace, Powell said.

"This program appeals to some of the cognitively lower functioning guys," Powell said.

Though the trial program was designed to last one year, Powell estimates the current class of participants are about 60 percent finished. A few have left the program for various reasons, but none have committed additional sexual offenses.

'Scarlet letter'

The support group the patients develop from taking the classes will decrease their chances of reoffending when they leave it, which is their most vulnerable time, Powell said.

"They wear a scarlet letter," Powell said. "This is a place where they can come in and discuss their issues with other guys who are dealing with it. This really aids in public safety."

The Sheriff's Office also is helping to pick up some of the costs for the patients, who would otherwise pay $40 for the weekly sessions. Because of the lengthened trial period and cost of reimbursement, the Clatsop County Board of Commissioners in February approved $15,000 this year for the entire sex offender treatment program. The funds represent a 75 percent increase to the program's budget for the current fiscal year.

Oregon will decide whether or not to provide statewide funding for the program once the trial program is complete, Lt. Kristen Hanthorn said. But Powell said he could see a modified version of the program continuing whether or not Oregon decides to fund it statewide.
