Wayne Ledford

Humor, laughter and a sunny disposition and delivered The Oregonian. were what Wayne Ledford was all about. He passed peacefully on April 4, 2017, with family at his side.

Wayne was born April 13, 1933, in Willow, California, and graduated from Arcata Union High School in 1951. During and after high school, he worked at various dairy farms with his mother, Agnus Hedlund. He lovingly helped support her and his younger siblings, who looked up to him like a father.

He relocated to San Bernardino, where he opened Wayne's Chainsaw & Power Tool Shop. He met and married Winifred Kellems in 1960. Two years later, Jennifer was born. Wishing for a better life for his family, he made the move to Brownsmead, Oregon, in 1967, and later to Svensen.

He became a tree faller for Crown Zellerbach and Arvo Aho Logging. In the early 1980s, his next adventure was driving log trucks. He started Wilco Logging, and became a well-known sight on the roads with his self-loading log truck. In his later years, he lived with Patricia Harney in the Jeffers Gardens area, where he had a shop, scrap business

Wayne will be dearly missed by his daughter, Jennifer; son-in-law, Randy; grandson, Deejay; former wife, Winifred; his brother, Vince; sisters Linda and Carol; and many nieces and nephews. He was predeceased by his brother, Rodney; sister, Cherie; and partner, Patricia Harney.

Special thanks to all the cousins in the Bartlett and Allen families, and longtime friends Butch and Lori Hennessee, Rhonda and Dennis, and Pastor Jackson. Their continuous support were an inspiration for him. His niece, Debbie Wallace, and friend, Marcy, helped orchestrate his care and well being in Port Haven, and his desired move back to Clatsop County. A sincere thanks, as well, to the hospice and staff at Avamere.

Wayne was a very memorable character, a hard working man's man with a generous heart and contagious laughter that will be missed by all that knew him.

A celebration of life is being held on Saturday, April 29, at 2 p.m at Knappa Assembly of God, with a reception following.

Clam dig cleared for Long Beach Peninsula

EO Media Group

LONG BEACH, Wash. - Ending the longest closure since 2002, state shellfish managers have approved a five-day razor clam dig that began this morning on the Long Beach Peninsula.

Twin Harbors, Copalis and Mocrocks beaches also will be

The Washington Department of Fish and Wildlife approved the opening after marine toxin tests showed that clams at all four beaches are safe to eat.

Dan Ayres, a state coastal shellfish manager, noted that the upcoming dig marks the first time Long Beach and Ocean Park beaches will open for clam digging this season, which began in October. Marine toxin levels at the beach had exceeded state health standards since last fall, but not anymore, Ayres

"We know that people have been waiting to dig razor clams at Long Beach for a long time, and we're pleased we can finally add that beach to the lineup," Ayres said.

"Toxin levels there and at the other three beaches are all well within state health standards."

Tests on Sunday found a maximum level of domoic toxin of 10 parts per million in peninsula clams, well below the 20 ppm threshold at which clamming is not safe.

Long Beach and Twin Harbors will both be open for five straight days of digging, while Copalis and Mocrocks will open on alternating days. All four beaches will be open on morning tides, with no digging allowed after noon.

Fishery managers close portion of Oregon Coast to salmon fishing

By CASSANDRA PROFITA

Oregon Public Broadcasting

About 200 miles of the West Coast will be closed to ocean salmon fishing this year to protect a record-low run of Klamath River Chinook.

Fishery managers with the Pacific Fishery Management Council voted Tuesday for a total closure of ocean salmon seasons from southern Oregon to northern California.

Commercial troll fishing seasons will be closed from Florence to Horse Mountain, which is south of Eureka, California. Sport fishing seasons will be closed from Humbug Mountain south of Port Orford to Horse Mountain. The rest of the coast will have limited fishing seasons.

West Coast salmon runs have been hit hard in recent years by drought conditions in their native rivers and El Niño conditions in the Pacific Ocean that reduce their food sources.

While fishermen up and down the coast are in for a tough year, those who depend on Klamath River salmon are already calling for help. Fishing groups and Native American tribes plan to ask California Gov. Jerry Brown to declare a fishing disaster so they can receive federal assistance.

The salmon returns for other Oregon streams and the Columbia River look healthier than the Klamath, according to state reports. And Washington state is expecting average to good Chinook returns for Puget Sound salmon and other coastal rivers. However, some Washington coho salmon stocks are expected to have low returns, and that triggers restrictions on other salmon fisheries.

The North Coast of Oregon and Washington will have minimal seasons that are a little better than last year, according to Butch Smith, who chairs an advisory panel that helps the council set salmon seasons.

Smith said the fishing seasons from Florence to San Francisco are so grim they will likely qualify for fishing disaster assistance. Managers were only able to allow fisheries in that whole region to catch about 800 Klamath River fish to protect what is projected to be smallest run ever of Klamath River fall Chinook.
