Astoria schools consider bonds

By EDWARD STRATTON The Daily Astorian

With its general obligation bond from 2000 coming off the books in the summer of 2019, the Astoria School District is considering asking voters for another round of bonds in two

State bonding expert Carol Samuels presented to the Astoria School Board Wednesday on when the district might want to go out for a bond. The school board later voted to request proposals for a firm to perform a facilities assessment, a longrange facilities plan and a public outreach campaign this year in preparation for a possible bond campaign in the 2018-19 school year. The Warrenton-Hammond

School District, facing overcrowding, is also exploring a bond to increase classroom space. Seaside School District recently passed a bond of nearly $100 million to build a new K-12 campus outside the tsunami inundation zone.

Astoria schools last passed $21.4 million in bonds in 2000, which paid for the construction of Lewis and Clark Elementary School; a new science center, gym and student commons at Astoria High School; and the renovation of Astoria Middle School's track facilities and other upgrades at all the district's buildings. The bonds come off the books in June 2019. That started the discussion of a new round of bonds, Superintendent Craig Hoppes said, as well as the district wanting to make sure the schools children attend are safe.

The facilities assessment will look at the district's two elementary schools, middle school, high school, district offices, transportation office, athletic fields and water and sewer systems.

recently The district received a $25,000 seismic assessment grant from the state Department of Education, and is seeking grants for the facilities assessment and longrange plans, each worth similar amounts. Hoppes said he would like the district to go through with the assessments regardless of whether the additional grants come through.

In other news:

• The school board voted to approve an evaluation and new contract through June 2019 for Hoppes, who has been the district's superintendent since 2008 and a principal since the late 1990s. Hoppes will earn approximately $130,000 a year. Hoppes thanked the school board for the new contract an a positive evaluation.

Oregon set to shield marijuana user data

By KRISTENA HANSEN Associated Press

SALEM — State lawmakers who fear heightened marijuana enforcement by federal agents have overwhelmingly approved a proposal to protect pot users cannabis-buying habits from being divulged by the shops that practice in a state where marimake buying pre-rolled joints juana shops often keep a digital and "magic" brownies as easy as grabbing a bottle of whiskey from the liquor store.

The bipartisan proposal from having their identities or would protect pot consumers by abolishing a common business paper trail of their recreational pot customers' names, birthdates, addresses and other personal information.

Salmon fishing extended on Columbia River

The Daily Astorian

Recreational anglers will have nine extra days this month to fish for Chinook salmon on the Lower Columbia River.

Fishery managers in Oregon and Washington state decided Wednesday that fishers can retain Chinook from today through Monday and April 20 and April 23. The extension applies to waters east of Buoy 10 to Beacon Rock for boat anglers and bank anglers. Fishing from the bank will be allowed from Beacon Rock to the Bonneville Dam. The closure remains in effect near the mouth of the Lewis River.

The daily bag limit is two adult salmonids per day only one can be Chinook and only adipose fin-clipped fish can be kept.

Due to poor fishing conditions and low catch rates, this is the second time this year fishery managers have extended the season. Managers will meet again Wednesday to evaluate ongoing fisheries.
