Artist residency applications now being accepted

ASTORIA — Astoria Visual Arts and Recology Western Oregon are looking for artists to take up the Coastal Oregon Artist Residency, a program focused on creating art from materials from Recology's Astoria Recycling Depot and Transfer Station.

The two summer 2017 residencies on offer will begin Monday, July 17. The submission deadline is Sunday, June 4.

"RWO and AVA teamed up last year to create the residency with the goal of promoting new ways for people to think about art, the environment and reclamation," Fred Stemmler, general manager of Recology Western Oregon, said in a release. "The first two (residency) artists were amazing — the work they created blew us and everyone else away. It was a great experience for all involved, and we look forward to welcoming two new artists this year."

The three-month residency gives selected artists access to discarded materials, a stipend of $400 per month and a large studio space at the Recycling Center. The artists also enjoy weekday "scavenging privileges" and access to the on-site studio.

At the conclusion of the residencies, Recology and Astoria Visual Arts host a reception and public exhibition for the artists that showcase the artwork produced. The artists will be asked to contribute one piece of artwork to the program's permanent collection.

Established in 2016, the residency is open to artists working in any style or medium and who live in Clatsop and Tillamook Counties in Oregon, and Pacific and Wahkiakum Counties in Washington.
