Help monitor coastal birds May 6

Community members have the opportunity on Saturday, May 6, to help the Audubon Society, a nonprofit organization dedicated to protecting the environment, research two iconic coastal birds: black oystercatchers and brown pelicans.

A training session on black oystercatcher monitoring will be held 10 a.m. at Cannon Beach City Hall (163 E. Gower St.). This event is free and open to the public.

Beverages and snacks will be provided.

The training is happening with the Audubon Society of Portland, in partnership with the Haystack Rock Awareness Program, Friends of Cape Falcon Marine Reserve, Oregon Marine Reserve Partnership, the U.S. Geological Survey, and U.S. Fish and Wildlife.

The Audubon Society of Portland and partner agencies are conducting a black oystercatcher citizen scientist project to better understand the species' use of rocky intertidal habitats in Oregon's marine reserves.

To participate, contact Joe Liebezeit at jliebezeit@audubonportland.org, and Amelia O'Connor at ameliajoconnor@gmail.com.

Then, from 4 to 7 p.m. that day, volunteers can help track brown pelicans, as they migrate along the West Coast, with the Haystack Rock Awareness Program or Friends of Cape Falcon Marine Reserve.

HRAP will monitor the birds at Haystack Rock, and the Friends group will monitor islands within the reserve along Falcon Cove Beach. Contact site leaders to join in:

Haystack Rock: Melissa Keyser, HRAP program coordinator: hrap@ci-cannon-beach.or.us, 503-436-8060.

Falcon Cove and Cape Falcon Marine Reserve: Nadia Gardner: nadiagardner@yahoo.com, 503-298-9785.
