Astoria Visual Arts announces artists-in-residence

ASTORIA — Astoria Visual Arts spring-summer artists-in-residence are Astoria residents Tyler Little and Andie Sterling.

During his residency, Tyler will be housed at Studio 11, where he plans to work on stop-motion videos, photographs, music and paintings.

“Recently, I have developed a love for making large paintings,” Little said. “Usually consisting of disproportionate characters, fictional landscapes, yada, yada, yada.”

Sterling, whose fall-winter residency was extended for four months, will be working in a new studio, at Pier 11. She plans to branch out and explore “untrodden paths connecting people to art in Astoria,” according to press materials.

“I want to introduce the element of viewer interaction to my installations by creating engaging sculptural objects to view my animations inspired by original moving picture devices such as the zoetrope, phenakistoscope, and peephole cinema,” Sterling wrote in her extension request.

“In continuing to challenge the idea of traditional artist exhibition space,” she continued, “I will be looking to outdoor public locations to simultaneously challenge and broaden the art viewer demographic.”
