

Another US appeals court keeps Trump's revised travel ban blocked

SEATTLE — Another U.S. appeals court upheld a decision blocking President Donald Trump's revised travel ban today, dealing the administration another legal defeat as the Supreme Court considers a separate case on the issue.

The ruling from a unanimous three-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said the president violated U.S. immigration law by discriminating against people based on their nationality and by failing to demonstrate that their entry into the country would hurt American interests.

"Immigration, even for the president, is not a one-person show," the judges said. "The president's authority is subject to certain statutory and constitutional restraints."

It keeps in place a decision by U.S. District Judge Derrick Watson in Hawaii that he based largely on Trump's campaign statements calling for a "complete and total shut-down" of Muslims entering the U.S.

Watson ruled that the true purpose of the temporary ban on travel from six mostly Muslim nations was to discriminate against Islam — not to protect national security. That violated the Constitution's prohibition on the government officially favoring or disfavoring any religion, he said.

The 9th Circuit judges said they didn't need to reach the constitutional question because the travel ban violated immigration law, and thus wasn't allowed.

The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Virginia also ruled against the travel ban May 25, citing the president's campaign statements as evidence that the 90-day ban is "steeped in animus and directed at a single religious group." The administration has appealed that ruling to the Supreme Court.

The high court is considering a request to reinstate the policy and could act before the justices wind up their work at the end of June.

The 9th Circuit heard arguments May 15 in an expedited appeal of the Hawaii case. Acting Solicitor General Jeffrey Wall said the travel ban is well within the president's broad authority to secure the nation's borders, an assertion that drew skeptical questioning from the judges, all appointees of President Bill Clinton.

"How is a court to know if, in fact, it's a Muslim ban in the guise of national security justification?" asked Judge Ronald Gould.

Neal Katyal, an attorney representing Hawaii, which sued to stop the ban, told the judges the policy could not be squared with U.S. immigration law, which bars nationality-based discrimination in issuing immigration visas, or with the U.S. Constitution's prohibition on the government favoring or disfavoring any religion.

He too faced some difficult questioning, including queries on whether the lower-court decision was too broad.

Trump issued his initial travel ban on a Friday in late January, bringing chaos and protests to airports around the country.

Woman killed in crash near Cullaby Lake

The Daily Astorian

A Seaside woman died early Saturday morning after a head-on collision on U.S. Highway 101 near Cullaby Lake.

Kayla Lynn Weber, 27, of Seaside, who was in a 2001 Toyota Camry, collided with a 1984 Chevrolet pickup truck, which then caught fire, just before 2:30 a.m. While emergency personnel found the woman dead on arrival, a man — Christopher Jeremy Costa, 23, of Astoria — had escaped the fiery truck.

Police determined Costa had crossed the center line for unknown reasons and struck Weber's vehicle. Alcohol is being investigated as a contributing factor in the crash, Oregon State Police has confirmed.

Weekend power outages impact Astoria

The Daily Astorian

Pacific Power reported three power outages across Astoria late Saturday afternoon, affecting just under 3,000 customers. The outages were part of a larger outage involving a failed insulator. A spokesperson for Pacific Power said that typically crews can route around this type of problem and restore power to some customers while repairs are in progress.

Section of Highway 202 to close for culvert repair

The Daily Astorian

A section of Oregon Highway 202 2 miles south of Astoria will be closed to all traffic most of Tuesday through Wednesday.

From 8 a.m. Tuesday through 8 p.m. Wednesday, the road will close as the State Department of Transportation replaces a failing culvert. ODOT closed the road last week to large commercial trucks with 24-hour flagging.
