

Bill sets deadlines for public records requests

Exemptions will also be catalogued

SALEM — A bill to set deadlines for responding to public records requests is headed to Gov. Kate Brown's desk, after the state House of Representatives unanimously approved the measure on Monday.

Senate Bill 481 gives agencies about 15 days to hand over public documents or provide a written explanation for the delay. Under existing law, there is no set deadline for a response.

"When it comes to public records requests, Oregonians are entitled to both transparency and timelines," said Oregon Attorney General Ellen Rosenblum.

If the bill is signed into law, public agencies would be required to acknowledge receipt of a request within five days and either hand over the records at least 10 days after that or give a written explanation for when the request will be satisfied. The bill clarifies that requestors have a legal right to appeal if they believe a public agency is taking longer than necessary.

The bill tasks the Attorney General's Office with cataloging the state's some 500 public records exemptions so that the public can find them more easily. The exemptions are scattered in separate Oregon statutes.

The legislation is the product of a public records law reform task force assembled by the attorney general in October 2015.

"I am proud to have spearhead the most significant reform to our public records law in over 40 years," Rosenblum said in a statement Monday.

Seaside suspect pleads not guilty to charges related to standoff

By JACK HEFFERNAN

Shaun Scarborough

SEASIDE — A Seaside man arrested following a standoff with police earlier this month pleaded not guilty Monday to charges of felon in possession of a firearm, interfering with a peace officer and reckless driving.

Shaun Mitchell Scarborough, 28, held a kitchen knife to his throat for nearly two hours June 2 as Seaside Police attempted to arrest him at an apartment on South Columbia Street, Lt. Bruce Holt said. He eventually was struck by a stun gun and arrested just after 5 p.m.

Police initially responded just before 2:30 p.m. to a report of a physical disturbance between Scarborough and his mother at the apartment. But Scarborough was gone when police arrived, and no charges resulted from the original report.

Neighbors then said they had seen him drive recklessly, maneuvering quickly around corners.

Officers located the silver Audi that Scarborough had been driving minutes later at a home a couple of blocks away, although he was not there. A handgun was allegedly found inside, and Scarborough is a convicted felon. The keys to the car were later found in Scarborough's possession, police said.

After police spotted the car, he was later seen fleeing back toward the apartment on South Columbia Street.

Police then located Scarborough in the kitchen of the apartment as he held the knife to his throat. Officers took cover since they could not see Scarborough for a portion of the standoff, Holt said.

Following a lengthy conversation with Scarborough, police were able to get closer to him before they eventually used a stun gun on him and arrested him. Police used the stun gun because they noticed what could have been the handle of a blade in his left hand as they got closer, Holt said. The object turned out to be a bandage on his middle finger resulting from a staph infection.

Scarborough could face up to seven years in prison if convicted on all charges.

US cancels new protection for endangered West Coast whales

By ELLEN KNICKMEYER
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The Trump administration on Monday threw out a new rule intended to limit the numbers of endangered whales and sea turtles getting caught in fishing nets off the West Coast, saying existing protections were already working.

Economically, the new rule would have had "a much more substantial impact on the fleet than we originally realized," said Michael Milstein, a spokesman with the federal fisheries service, which killed the rule.

The rule would have applied to fewer than 20 fishing vessels that use mile-long fishing nets to catch swordfish off California and Oregon. The change would have shut down the drift gillnet fishing for swordfish for up to two seasons if too many of nine groups of whales, sea turtles or dolphins were getting caught in the nets.

The Pacific Fishery Management Council, which includes representatives of the fishing industry as well as state and tribal governments and federal regulators, had proposed the rule in 2015.

Rejecting it, the National Marine Fisheries Service decided that safety measures already taken by the fishing industry, such as putting pinging warning devices on the nets that could be heard by some of the creatures, were working to drastically cut the numbers of whales and turtles becoming tangled in the nets, Milstein said.
