McCain says 'I'll be back soon' as he battles brain cancer

WASHINGTON — Battling brain cancer, Sen. John McCain today promised to return to work, making a good-natured dig at his Republican and Democratic colleagues who were jolted by news of the six-term lawmaker's diagnosis.

"I greatly appreciate the outpouring of support — unfortunately for my sparring partners in Congress, I'll be back soon, so stand-by!" McCain said in a tweet.

The 80-year-old McCain, the GOP's presidential nominee in 2008, was diagnosed with glioblastoma, an aggressive type of brain cancer, according to doctors at the Mayo Clinic in Phoenix, who had removed a blood clot above his left eye last Friday.

"Subsequent tissue pathology revealed that a primary brain tumor known as a glioblastoma was associated with the blood clot," his office said in a statement late Wednesday.

The senator and his family are considering further treatment, including chemotherapy and radiation, as he recuperates at his home in Arizona.

According to the American Brain Tumor Association, more than 12,000 people a year are diagnosed with glioblastoma, the same type of tumor that struck McCain's close Democratic colleague in legislative battles, the late Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts. The American Cancer Society puts the five-year survival rate for patients over 55 at about 4 percent.

Human rights petition sent for Hawaii fishermen

HONOLULU — Groups have filed a human-rights complaint that aims to jump-start an investigation into conditions among foreign workers in Hawaii's commercial fishing industry.

Turtle Island Restoration Network told The Associated Press on Wednesday that they filed the complaint last week with the Inter-American Human Rights Commission. The filing asks the panel to determine the responsibility of the U.S. for human rights violations against foreign workers in Hawaii's longline fishing fleet.

An Associated Press investigation into the seafood industry revealed that hundreds of men are confined to Hawaii boats that operate due to a federal loophole that exempts the foreign fishermen from most basic labor protections. Many come from impoverished Southeast Asian and Pacific nations to take the jobs, which can pay as little as 70 cents an hour.

The fleet catches $110 million worth of luxury seafood annually.

The petition, which the Pacific Alliance to Stop Slavery and Ocean Defenders Alliance joined, was filed on July 13 with the agency that can make non-binding recommendations to government officials and policymakers.

The Inter-American Human Rights Commission is an autonomous body of the Organization of American States, which works to protect human rights in the hemisphere. The U.S. is a member of that organization.

Trump's critique of Sessions reflects long-held frustrations

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump's extraordinary public denouncement of Attorney General Jeff Sessions reflected a long-simmering frustration with one of his staunchest allies, but was not a calculated attempt to force Sessions from the Cabinet, according to two Trump advisers.

For weeks, the president has seethed about Sessions' decision to recuse himself from the federal investigation into whether Trump's campaign coordinated with Russia during last year's election. On Wednesday, Trump told The New York Times that he would never have appointed Sessions to the post if he had known the former Alabama senator would make that decision.

"Sessions should have never recused himself," Trump told the paper, "And if he was going to recuse himself he should have told me before he took the job and I would have picked somebody else."

College: Lack of housing a challenge for attracting international students maintenance and modernization costs. The college board last year rejected an offer by a developer wanting to acquire the center and the adjacent Josie Peper Building as part of a larger housing complex.

Clatsop Community College is deciding what to do with the Performing Arts Center and the adjacent Josie Peper Building.

Housing options

During the college board's annual retreat Tuesday, Breitmeyer said he reached out to other institutions about potential partnerships on housing. One example he gave was Community College of Philadelphia, which partnered with a developer to build a mix of student and market-rate housing to attract international students paying out-of-state tuition on a piece of property near campus. Former college President Lawrence Galizio had pointed to a lack of housing as a challenge in attracting international students.

Breitmeyer said the college could negotiate for certain amenities in the development, such as the number of student housing units and a performing arts space operated by the Partners.

"I think it's important to have something like the PAC, so keeping that would be the best option," he said.

The college would lease the land long term to a private entity acting as landlord. Another possibility is turning the building over to the Partners.

Partners

Breitmeyer and JoAnn Zahn, the college's vice president of finance and operations, met earlier this month with the Partners. The Partners' co-chairwoman Charlene Larsen said the group understands the college will no longer use and eventually no longer own the center.

"Our understanding is the college administration wants to see the PAC in community hands," Larsen said.

She said the housing possibilities mentioned to her seemed like they would take more than just the center's property.

The offer on the center last year was part of a larger housing project encompassing most of the city block, much of which is owned by the Lum family and part of a former auto dealership. The developer's representatives stated an interest in keeping the center a "community center," albeit without elaboration. Breitmeyer said the college has not reached out to the Lum family regarding this most recent housing possibility.

At the retreat, Brietmeyer said tearing the church down to build a new performance space within a housing complex could be more cost-effective. The site could be too small to attract a developer for a housing complex.

Larsen said she doesn't think much of tearing down the historic building, which also has a recently refurbished Estey organ built in. "I think that would cause a hue and cry" in the community, she said.

Moving forward

Larsen said the group is getting closer to forming a nonprofit and is looking to take on more of the building's maintenance.

"I think you can do a lot with volunteers and grants," she said of fixing the building's larger issues, adding that having the college as owner helps when applying for restoration grants.

At the board retreat, Zahn reiterated that the building needs major upgrades and lacks basic safety features, such as sprinklers in the main auditorium. She said the Partners are aware that if anything major, such as the building's heating and ventilation system, were to fail, the college would not be able to fix it.

Board members said they'd like to see an analysis of the supply and demand of performance spaces in the community, along with a timeline for when they will decide which direction to go on the center. The board next meets in September.
