James (Jim) Charles Davies

Astoria

Dec. 1, 1952 — July 28, 2017

James (Jim) Charles Davies was born in Portland, Oregon, to Nancy Robison and Jack Davies on Dec. 1, 1952. He died July 28, 2017. Surviving family members, friends, coworkers and neighbors mourn his passing.

Jim grew up in Oregon in the 1960s, and adventure followed throughout his life. Jim was passionate about fishing, and was a commercial fisherman for many years, working boats in Astoria and Alaska. A master hunter and fisherman, Jim would advise even the most novice in techniques to fish or hunt with success.

A great day for Jim was a day in the outdoors; motorcycling, biking, hiking, bow hunting for deer and elk, fishing for anything in any kind of waters, clamming and crabbing, then sharing his catch with those he loved.

Jim loved life in the Astoria area, and passed away here anticipating his 65th birthday and retirement.

He was generous, kind and funny. We are saddened by his passing. Peace be with you, Jim!

Man cited after boat crash near Hammond

By JACK HEFFERNAN
The Daily Astorian

A man was cited for three counts of fourth-degree assault and reckless endangerment after allegedly colliding his fishing boat with another vessel Saturday morning on the Columbia River near Hammond.

Marlin Larsen, 74, was driving a fiberglass 31-foot Bayliner Trophy up river with two other passengers —

Adam Forrester, 20, and Timothy Forrester, 52 — just after 8:30 a.m. It then collided with an aluminum 20-foot Weldcraft, soon after that boat's operator — Christopher McMahon, 45 — and two passengers — Bryan Maess, 47, and Roni Durham, 57 — jumped into the river to avoid the impact.

McMahon and the two passengers had been trolling for salmon. Boaters in the area pulled them from the river as the Clatsop County Sheriff's Office and U.S. Coast Guard responded. All three were treated for minor injuries at Columbia Memorial Hospital.

Larsen is a Roseburg resident who owns the Harborview Resort in Hammond. Prior to Saturday's incident, he had been cited for speeding in Oregon eight times since 1983.

The Sheriff's Office is still investigating the incident.

Eclipse travel forecast: Heavy traffic just ahead

Worse than people expect

By RACHEL LA CORTE
Associated Press

OLYMPIA, Wash. — Transportation officials in Oregon and Washington state have a message for the region's drivers: However bad you think traffic is going to be during next week's total solar eclipse, it's probably going to be worse than you imagine.

While just a 60-to-70 mile wide swath of central Oregon is within the path of totality next Monday, Washington state and Oregon officials say that significant backups are expected throughout both states both before and after the short event ends, with potentially hundreds of thousands of people clogging the roadways as they try to drive home or head to airports.

"This is the biggest transportation event that has ever hit Oregon," said Dave Thompson, a spokesman for the Oregon Department of Transportation.

The eclipse is the first coast-to-coast total solar eclipse in the United States since 1918, and the first to hit any section of the U.S. mainland since 1979. In Oregon, about a million people are expected to cluster in various areas in the central part of the state to watch the event. The moon first starts to cross the sun in Oregon shortly after 9 a.m. PDT, and totality — when the moon completely eclipses the sun — begins near Lincoln City, Oregon, at 10:15 a.m. PDT and lasts just under two minutes.

Officials say while many eclipse enthusiasts who traveled to the region will stay after it ends, many will immediately take to the roads, potentially overwhelming the system.

They also say those who live in Washington state or in other parts of Oregon who think they can drive to central Oregon the day of the eclipse are likely to find themselves stuck in traffic so bad they risk missing the eclipse, and also running out of gas and other essentials.

Here's what officials say drivers should expect — and things they should plan:

ECLIPSE GATHERINGS: Oregon officials say that more than 150 events are planned throughout the state, including at the state Capitol in Salem, wineries, and national forests. Officials suggest getting to where you need to get a few days in advance, and plan to extend your trip. Many hotels and campgrounds have been long booked, and camping in highway rest areas is not allowed.

WHAT TO BRING: Make sure you have extra supplies of everything you might need for several hours in the car: water, food, medications and an emergency kit, as well as a full tank of gas. Officials also suggest bringing a paper map since cell service may be spotty and GPS unreliable. Also make sure to have proper eclipse watching glasses.

EXPECTED CHOKES POINTS ON THE ROAD: Interstate 5 and Interstate 205 bridges that connect Vancouver, Washington, and Portland, Oregon; Interstate 82 in Benton County; US 97 in Klickitat County; State Road 14 along the Columbia River Gorge; US 197 in Dallesport; State Road 433, the Lewis and Clark Bridge between Longview, Washington, and Rainier; State Road 4, Longview to Naselle; SR 401, Naselle to Dismal Nitch; and US 101, Ilwaco, Washington, to Astoria. Officials warn that even areas not listed can see significant traffic increases.

DRIVE SAFELY: If you're driving, keep your eyes on the road. Also, don't drive with your eclipse glasses on, they're too dark. The emergency shoulder is for emergencies only: No pulling over to watch the eclipse.
