

Barnett: Judge sets bail at $500,000

As police responded, they spotted a 1999 Dodge Durango believed to be connected to the disturbance and attempted to intercept it. The Durango then collided with the police car and was able to speed off.

Minutes later, police came upon the accident scene — littered with shattered glass from the damaged bus stop and blood from the two victims — outside of McDonald's restaurant after 9 p.m. They detained Barnett as she was allegedly walking away from the crash.

An investigation revealed the driver of the Durango, described as a female by witnesses, was driving northbound on U.S. Highway 101. The driver then led the SUV onto the sidewalk, struck a concrete light pole and slammed into a bus stop shelter occupied by the two men.

Barnett admitted to being the driver and drinking prior to the crash, according to an affidavit.

Circuit Court Judge Paula Brownhill has set Barnett's bail at $500,000. She is scheduled to appear in court again next week. If convicted on all charges, she faces a minimum of 16 years in prison.

Barnett's father is former Seaside Police Lt. Steve Barnett, who unsuccessfully ran for county sheriff in 2012 and retired last year. Barnett, a veteran police officer, had filed a federal lawsuit against District Attorney Josh Marquis claiming his free speech and due process rights were violated when Marquis refused to use Barnett as a witness in prosecutions because of concerns about the officer's credibility. A federal appeals court ruled last year that Marquis had absolute immunity from the lawsuit.

Gearhart: Ballots will be mailed to voters Oct. 18

The city budget for this fiscal year anticipates collections of about $360,000, Sweet said.

Quality of life

The November vote is the latest step in the conversation started in 2013 when members of the Planning Commission and City Council considered changes to the way short-term rental properties are taxed and regulated within the city.

At the time, Gearhart had no ordinance requiring inspections or occupancy limits for vacation rentals.

Fourteen property owners filed an appeal with the state after adoption of regulations last fall. The state Land Use Board of Appeals upheld the city's short-term rental rules in June.

Meanwhile, supporters of repeal and replace gathered enough signatures to put the countermeasure on the ballot.

hart, Townsend said in a September letter to The Daily Astorian. "They are not a threat to our 'quiet residential community,' nor are they 'high commercial use' as the mayor claims."

Ballots will be mailed to voters Oct. 18. Election Day is Nov. 7.

Couple: 'The whole Las Vegas Strip was dead' options Sunday night: Cirque du Soleil at New York-New York Hotel and Casino and a Jason Aldean country music concert at the Route 91 Harvest Festival. The Stutzneppers picked Cirque du Soleil.

After enjoying the performance, the Stutzneppers made the brief walk back and stood outside their hotel just after 10 p.m. Suddenly, they heard three pops that, as many witnesses have said, sounded like fireworks. Seconds later they heard a barrage of rapid fire that lasted 15 seconds. No longer believing fireworks to be the cause of the noise, they rushed inside to their hotel room.

'Scared'

At that point, all they could do was listen to the scanner, the endless emergency sirens blaring below, multiple helicopters soaring above and the relentless rifle fire.

"I was scared even though I was locked in my building," Stutznegger said. "I wanted to get out of there."

He continued listening to the radio for about 1 1/2 hours. He tuned in as a SWAT team made its way to the hotel room where the shooter was located.

'I don't know that I'll ever want to go there again.'

Norm Stutznegger

Astorian who was in Las Vegas at the time of the mass shooting

Stutznegger then heard a bang similar to a host of gunshots or a door being kicked in. The shooter — Stephen Paddock, 64, of Mesquite, Nevada — repeatedly fired through the hotel room door before police eventually entered the room and found him dead.

With the sounds still fresh in their minds, the couple managed to drift off to sleep at roughly 3 a.m., a few hours after the bullets stopped flying. The original plan was to leave the hotel at 7:15 a.m., grab a cab and catch their flight home. But the strip was still locked down by the time they awoke.

"The whole Las Vegas Strip was dead," Stutznegger said. "It was weird."

For the first time since racing inside, the Stutzneppers ventured out to the street. As they once again stood outside their hotel and pondered a way out, the couple noticed concertgoers who were still wandering around.

"The looks on their faces was absolute horror," Stutznegger said. "They looked like zombies."

One woman they encountered was still unable to remove the blood from her clothes and skin. A man asked them, in a scared and somber tone, if he could be the first to take a taxi. His wife had been shot twice in the legs right next to him and taken to a hospital. She was about to go into surgery.

"To be honest, I think he just needed someone to talk to real quick," Stutznegger said.

They gazed upon the empty area that had welcomed country music fans just hours earlier. People were still sobbing, carrying wounded attendees and wading through abandoned possessions and garbage.

"It's hard to explain," Stutznegger said. "Everywhere you looked, there was devastation."

The couple eventually found an airport shuttle and was able to catch their flight on time. As they had done earlier in the weekend, they people-watched at the terminal. Unlike before, though, they glared at the bandages and crutches that covered some passers-by.

When they boarded the plane, the pilot announced that 16 passengers had not arrived and that the flight would be delayed for another few minutes. None of the missing passengers showed.

May not go back

The Stutzneppers returned to Astoria by late Monday afternoon. Their 12-year-old daughter had a volleyball game last night.

"I don't miss my kids' sporting events," said Stutznegger, who has four children and owns Pacific Coast Medical Supply, "so I made it."

The game offered the couple an opportunity to move past the visceral sights and sounds they had experienced the previous 18 hours. For Stutznegger, his fifth trip to Las Vegas will likely be his last.

"I don't know that I'll ever want to go there again," he said. "I don't know that I'll be comfortable."

Pearson: Going-away party will be on Oct. 18

"We have a really strong staff here that's able to do many other things than what their primary role is," he said.

The World of Speed was opened in 2015. Pearson said he toured the museum earlier this year, and after seeing a solid nonprofit backing it, decided to make the change. He starts next month as executive director.

A going-away party for Pearson will be held from 4 to 6 p.m. Oct. 18 at the maritime museum and is open to the public.
