

Husband is exploring porn

Dear Annie: My husband and I have been married for 22 years, and to my knowledge, he has always been committed to me and our family. However, recently he upgraded to a new phone, and I have found he is continually exploring porn and pictures of nude women. I know that all guys look at this from time to time, but now he carries around this mini computer and views it mostly at work. He has also gotten into Facebook. He didn't previously care what people were doing, but now, all of a sudden, he feels the need to friend everyone he's ever known. I've talked to him about his time on Facebook, and he just brushes it off as "something new."

I have never felt so insecure in all our years together as I have recently, and I'm at a loss as to how to get past his media cheating on our relationship. Why are most men this way? Can't we, the ones they vow to love to eternity, be enough? — Problems in Pennsylvania

Dear Problems: Quit snooping, and start talking with your husband about your concerns. I see nothing wrong with his adding old friends on Facebook, but compulsive viewing of porn can lead to addiction and damage real-world relationships. And if he's doing this at work, he not only is putting his job at risk but also could face legal consequences if he gets caught. To navigate these volatile, sensitive issues in a way that feels safe for you both, enlist the aid of a marriage counselor. Ask your husband to attend a few sessions, with the goal of reaching an understanding.

Dear Annie: I've seen people writing to you about being bothered by the phrase "no problem" as a response to "thank you." Here is something else to mull over: Why is it that store associates, restaurant servers and others feel the need to say "you guys" to customers? For instance: "Can I get you guys some beverages while you look at the menu?" This is not just happening at fast-food places. It's happening in many other businesses in the Northeast.

I am a senior woman, not a "guy." The servers probably think nothing of it other than as a way to say, "Can I help you?" But being called "you guys" surely puts the hairs up on the back of my neck. Is there a response that would be suitable? What's wrong with saying, "Can I get anyone a beverage while you look at the menu?" Leave the "you guys" for your friends at the gym. — Not Fond of "You Guys" on Cape Cod

Dear Not Fond of "You Guys": "You guys" is often regarded as the Northeastern counterpart to "y'all" — a catchall way to address a group, meant to connote warmth with its casualness. Obviously, it's missing the mark with you, and I'm sure you're not alone. I'm not sure what the answer is except to make people aware that some are offended by the term. To that end, I'm printing your letter.

TOMORROW'S HOROSCOPE

By Holiday Mathis, Creators Syndicate Inc.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). The person you imagine you admired someone to be and the person that someone actually is ... well, of course they can't be one in the same — unless you're a fiction writer inventing a person.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). This conflict embodies the same source of all conflicts. Both sides believe they are doing what's best; they just have drastically different ideas and definitions of what that entails.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Think about the problem as if it were your own, whether or not that's the case. Of course, solving problems that aren't yours always comes with the added problem of getting others to adopt your solution.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Accepting someone's story is often a matter of convenience over plausibility. We all believe what we'd rather believe. Remember this, because you'll be in a position to convince someone of the truth.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). The good thing about your cosmic mindset is that it limits the amount of time you're willing to spend on trivial, personal minutia. There are much, much bigger things with which to concern yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). When good taste prevents a person from getting involved with good people, that's called snobbery. The division is bad for everyone. You'll fight this in yourself and you'll call it out in others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). When you're not sure what to do next, a small voice inside you will chime in: "Is this really what the world needs now?" Your focus on what's missing in the world (instead of what's missing in you) will light the way.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Loved ones don't always agree on how to get things done, but today you'll at least agree on the goal. Focus on this and unify your efforts. You'll prevail on the collective strength of the group.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Purge your stuff and your soul gets purged, too. Release the old; let go of the tired; get rid of the rubbish. It will help you take advantage of opportunities that will come with next week's new moon.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Sleep is what you long for when the alarm clock goes off in the morning and yet still resist in the wee hours of a fun night. For optimum health and vitality through the end of the year, guard your sleep this weekend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). When the environment is neat and orderly, you feel that all is right with the world. It's why you'll work so hard today to straighten things up and organize what you have.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). The mirror isn't enchanted; the tomb isn't cursed; the artifacts don't come with power beyond what they're given. But some things really ought to be given power. Make a thing sacred. Do this by giving it sacred attention.

TOMORROW'S BIRTHDAY (Dec. 15). Your unsinkable attitude is what will make this a remarkable year. Setbacks will happen, and you'll keep bobbing back up and moving forward. Gorgeous additions to your environment happen in early 2018. A twist in your professional world will allow for a fresh approach to finance. Aquarius and Taurus adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 44, 48, 30 and 12.
