When it comes to holiday cards, which celebs do it right?

By LEANNE ITALIE

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Holiday cards of the paper and stamp variety still get sent, so what does that look like celebrity to celebrity?

Hugh Jackman of "The Greatest Showman" wasn't giving up any names, but he told The Associated Press recently there does sometimes feel like a competition this time of year.

"Some of these holiday cards are remarkable," he said. "I'm, like, 'Did Annie Leibovitz shoot this?' We do kind of rate them a little bit. It's horrible to say."

Jackman's co-star, Rebecca Ferguson, wasn't shy about a little name dropping: Tom Cruise.

ble — Rogue Nation" co-star, Ferguson declared that "Tom's quite good at it."

She explained, "Usually at birthdays I'll get Tom's signature cake. He says it's dairy free, wheat free, gluten free, sugar free. It's bulls---. He just wants to fatten up everyone else around him. But I'm not much of a person who keeps in contact. You know, I shoot a movie and I move on. I have my friends and I worship and maintain that."

Patrick Wilson, appears in next month's train thriller "The Commuter," has a favorite celebrity card sender.

"The most fun holiday cards I would get were these painted cards from Phil Collins that were pretty awesome, although now that I think about it I haven't gotten one in a few years. Phil, come on," he said.

Liam Neeson, who stars in "The Commuter," really appreciates a certain old friend at the holidays. "Steven Spielberg. Since

'Schindler's List' he never forgets my birthday and he never forgets Christmas," Neeson said. "I adore him for that. And there's years I forget to send the cards and stuff like that, but Steven is so ... He's just very, very loyal. I really appreciate that."

Christina Hendricks, who appears in the Agatha Christie-based "Crooked House," said, other than Neil Patrick Harris and David Burtka, she has no standouts in mind on holiday cards.

"Do people still do cards? I'm so impressed," she said.

Harris and Burtka go all out, though.

"They always do a nice one with their kids. They're very theatrical. They like to dress up and do costumes," Hendricks said.

Frenchman Gilles Paquet-Brenner, her director and the film's co-screenwriter, still isn't used to the whole holiday card thing.

"It's so American," he said. "We would never do that in France. We kind of laugh. When I get cards from American people that actually do that, it's sweet, but it's just kind of, 'Oh, they still do that.""

Matt Damon, who gets small in "Downsizing," hears from the usual colleagues in cards.

"You would think that Clooney would send out something funny, but he's so serious now," Damon deadpanned of his "Suburbicon" director. "You know, he's married, he's got kids. He's really settled down, so I'm not really expecting anything."

Associated Press writer Jill Dobson in New York contributed to this report.
