Oregon Dreamers heading to State of the Union speech

By PARIS ACHEN Capital Bureau

When President Donald Trump gives his State of the Union address, he'll see the faces of 24-year-old Aldo Solano of Portland and at least 25 other "Dreamers" who could face deportation without congressional action.

U.S. Rep. Earl Blumenhauer, D-Oregon, was the first member of the House to announce he would boycott the president's annual speech Tuesday to the joint session of Congress. Instead, he is sending Solano.

Solano said he wants to attend the event to advocate for passage of immigration reform that will protect undocumented immigrants who came to the country as children and allow them to legally work and study here.

wrote that he was frustrated by the lack of progress in protecting "Dreamers."

Since then, at least 24 House Democrats plan to bring or send "Dreamers" to the event, according to ABC News. That number includes Oregon's U.S. Reps. Suzanne Bonamici, Peter DeFazio and Kurt Schrader.

Oregon's U.S. Sens. Jeff Merkley and Ron Wyden also plan to bring recipients of the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program as guests to the speech, their spokespeople said.

Solano said he is willing take the risk of negative attention from the administration to advocate for protecting the 800,000 DACA recipients from deportation. More than 11,000 of them live in Oregon. Ending DACA would cost the state more than $605.6 million annually in loss of gross to the Center for American Progress.

The program, established in 2012 by President Barack Obama, has allowed Solano to legally work and attend college in the country.

Solano studies at Portland Community College and works as the policy director for the Oregon Latino Health Coalition Solano's parents, who were agricultural migrant workers, brought him at age 6 to the country from Mexico for a better life. At the time, his older brother was 8, and his younger sister was less than 1 year old. Both of his siblings also are DACA recipients.

He grew up and graduated from Woodburn High School. Like other DACA youth, he has almost no memory of a home other than the United States.

'This is my home," Solano said. "There is nowhere else

Three vie for community development director job

The Daily Astorian

Three finalists for Astoria's community development director position will attend a public meet and greet Feb. 15.

The candidates are vying for a position previously held by Kevin Cronin since 2015. Cronin announced he was leaving his post last fall amid concerns about his management.

City Manager Brett Estes, who had been the commudevelopment director prior to Cronin, filled in as interim director. Former Astoria planner and Cannon Beach Mayor Mike Morgan came on in October to serve as an interim city planner to further round out the community development staff while Estes searched for Cronin's replacement.

Estes has not released the names of the candidates. They will be announced the night of the meet and greet.

The informal reception is open to anyone who wants to meet the candidates and provide feedback to the city. It will be held at Clatsop Community College, Columbia Room 219. Doors will be open from 5:30 p.m. to 7 p.m.

Separate from the meet and greet, the candidates will be interviewed by the city's other department heads and by Estes.

The community development director oversees issues such as development review, code enforcement and urban renewal. During his time with the city, Cronin helped launch Advance Astoria, which was intended as a road map for strategic economic development, looking at what the city already has and where new opportunities could develop.

OBITUARIES

Alice Collins Turina

Beaverton

Nov. 29, 1932 — Jan. 24, 2018

Alice Turina

The second child and only daughter of Charles Edward and Alice Collins Hodges, Alice Collins Turina was born Nov. 29, 1932. She was born and raised in Portland, attended Holy Child, and was a Gamma Phi at the University of Oregon. Turina has been a resident of Astoria, Oregon, since 1964, when her husband, Pat, moved the family there to help build the Astoria-Megler She loved sports and the outdoors. Her hobbies were many: sewing, cooking, canning, baking, horseback riding, skiing, biking, tennis, coaching softball and volleyball, swimming, clam digging, camping, hiking and travel.

After her divorce in 1968, Alice was a role model as a single mother. Her seven children were aged 2, 5, 8, 10, 12, 13 and 14. For five years she worked various jobs to provide for them. She was a bookkeeper, dishwasher, secretary at Clatsop Community College, and physical education instructor at Tongue Point Job Corps. She taught herself upholstery, and then taught upholstery classes at Clatsop Community College. She managed to keep the family well provided for in the large classic home at 1656 Irving St.

In the summer, she would load up the station wagon with her children, tie camping gear on top of the car, and take the family camping on the banks of the Nehalem River.

Turina loved clam digging. She would wake her children just before the break of dawn to catch the low tides for digging razor clams. Even her youngest children would dig with her. She continued this tradition with her grandchildren.

She loved being with children and playing games, singing silly songs, and making quilts for each of her grandchildren. Her favorite movie was "The Sound of Music." Family was very important to her.

Alice had a very strong faith, and loved to attend daily mass at St Mary, Star of the Sea Parish. She taught PE and coached volleyball at Star of the Sea School.

After five years of being single, she fell in love again. Charles Turina won her heart, and they married in June 1973. Charlie was her sons' basketball coach at Star of the Sea.

Alice had a generous heart when it came to serving the needs of those less fortunate in her community. She and her husband, Charlie, (who passed in 2001) started St. Vincent DePaul Food Bank in Astoria, which continues to serve the community.

Alice was an active member of St Mary, Star of the Sea Catholic Church, belonging to Catholic Daughters and the Altar Society. All seven children attended Star of the Sea School. She received an award as one of the top 100 Most Influential Women of Clatsop County. She will be fondly remembered and missed by Patrick M. O'Brien of Vancouver, Washington; her brother, Patrick Hodges (Lori) of Kirkland, Washington; and her children, Teresa Smith (Patrick) of Independence, Kathleen Arndt (Raymond) of Warrenton, Deborah Huhtala (Peter) of Tigard, Michael O'Brien (Cynthia) of Warrenton, Patrick O'Brien (Brenda) of Keizer, Timothy O'Brien (Angela) of Salem, John O'Brien (Veronique) of Paris; a foster daughter, Jocelyn Milliren (Pat) of Seaside; her 23 grandchildren; 25 great-grandchildren; and numerous nieces, nephews and friends. Her brother, Charles Edward Hodges Jr., preceded her in death in 2011.

Contributions can be made to St Vincent de Paul Food Bank.

Our recitation to the holy rosary will be held Feb. 3, 2018, at 10:30 a.m., followed by a Mass of Christian Burial, at 11 a.m., at St. Mary, Star of the Sea Catholic Church in Astoria. A reception will follow at St. Mary's Leahy Auditorium and Turina Gymnasium in the Star of the Sea School building.

A private graveside service will be held at Greenwood Cemetery in Astoria, Oregon.
