

New bill requires faster data breach notices

By PARIS ACHEN
Capital Bureau

SALEM — Oregon lawmakers hope to advance a bill this week to require companies to notify consumers within 45 days after discovering a data breach of their personal information.

House Bill 4147 also would prohibit companies from charging consumers or requesting their credit or debit card numbers to redeem the companies' offer for free credit card monitoring, a security freeze or to replace personal identification number, passwords or similar devices.

Dubbed the "Equifax bill," the proposed regulations intersect with revelations Friday that cyberthieves last year accessed more personal information than previously reported by the Equifax. The security breach affected an estimated 145.5 million consumers in the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom.

"Oregon fared no better — over 1.7 million of Oregonians' information was breached," according to written testimony from Oregon Attorney General Ellen Rosenblum's office. "As one cannot change their Social Security numbers, this is a breach that will follow Oregonians for many years to come. Not only does the sheer size of the breach cause concern, but the Equifax story revealed many other failures and unfair practices."

The Atlanta credit reporting agency discovered in July that hackers had stolen consumers' names, addresses, birthdates, Social Security numbers and certain driver's license information. But the breach wasn't reported to consumers until September, according to media reports.

A letter to U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Massachusetts, of the U.S. Senate Banking Committee on Friday showed that additional consumer information was exposed, including tax identification numbers, email addresses and additional driver's license information.

HB 4147 would require companies to reveal a breach within 45 days unless law enforcement determines doing so would impede a criminal investigation.

Data breaches less than 350,000 would require companies to notify consumers in writing, electronically or by phone. Notices of larger data breaches would require companies to post notice on their website and in statewide newspapers and television broadcasts. Companies would have to report all data breaches to the state attorney general's office.

Oregonians reported losses of $12.8 million from cybercrimes in 2016, according to the FBI's Internet Crime Complaint Center. Data breaches fuel those crimes, according to the attorney general's office.

Man injured aboard vessel anchored north of Astoria

The Daily Astorian

A worker was rescued early Monday morning after he was injured on a bulk carrier anchored north of Astoria.

The man had fallen into a bilge while installing a recirculation system on the Ergina Luck, according to a Coast Guard press release.

The Coast Guard, along with members of the Clatsop County high-angle rescue team, responded to the scene in a 47-foot lifeboat about 5 a.m.

After arriving, the man was unable to walk and had sustained injuries to his legs and back. The crew boarded the ship, immobilized the man, carried him up three sets of stairs and lowered him down to the lifeboat. He was then taken to shore to be treated.

The Coast Guard did not release the name of the man, only saying that he was an employee with Degesch America's Portland offices. His condition is unknown and the cause of the incident is being investigated.

Columbia Memorial Hospital names new operations chief

The Daily Astorian

Columbia Memorial Hospital has named Nicole Williams its new chief operating officer. She is the first to hold the newly created position.

"This move is extremely important for our organization, especially at this most challenging time in our industry," Erik Thorsen, the hospital's CEO, said. "With a COO and an outstanding leadership team collaborating and working together to continue achieving our essential operational objectives, I can focus on CMH's long-term future."

Williams joined the hospital in April. She was previously CEO of Clatsop Care Health District for four years.

Williams joined the Clatsop County Clerk's Office in 1999. She was named county clerk in 2005 and assistant county manager in 2008. She returned to the clerk position when it became vacant in 2012.

Williams has a master's in public administration from American Public University and a bachelor's in communications from Western Oregon University.
