

Flu: A cadre of women sprang into action upon a call for help virtually no contact with other people. With no roads near their home and no way of contacting the outside world, the couple had little hope of reaching anyone who could help them.

A stroke of luck saved their lives. In late January, rancher Jessie Smith Johnson, who lived two miles away, spontaneously decided to ride over to the Scholz homestead. She found the Scholzes “helplessly bedridden.” Unable to summon a doctor, she relied on her own nursing training and took care of them herself.

Heroes in white

Due to the war, medical experts were in short supply. Pacific County had only about four doctors and one county-appointed public health nurse, Margaret Hughes. By the second week of January, there was so much demand for home nurses that it was “almost an impossibility to procure any kind of paid help in South Bend,” according to the Pilot. Overworked caregivers neared the point of exhaustion. Hughes was “doing the work of half a dozen women, going from home to home, making fires, washing dishes, cooking and nursing and giving help where it is most needed,” the Pilot said. Between home visits, volunteer-recruiting events and writing advice columns for caregivers, she rushed to Naselle, where terrible weather had made the few existing roads almost impassable, leaving dozens of sick people without the care of a doctor.

By Jan. 20, Tripp, the health officer, had counted about 190 cases of flu in the northern part of the county, at a time when the county’s total population was only about 14,000. Red Cross volunteers had assembled a list of everyone in South Bend and Raymond who had medical training or other useful skills in October. Hughes and Tripp called upon them for help. A cadre of women sprang into action, opening emergency hospitals in a matter of hours and organizing volunteers to make home visits. Teachers, who were on leave due to the quarantine, were among the many women who worked at the hospitals around the clock, without pay.

Some gave all

Pacific County residents finally began to get some relief in February 1919. The number of flu cases began to shrink. Schools reopened, this time for good, and students crammed in extra days to make up for lost time. The quarantines were lifted, and overseas soldiers arrived home to overjoyed families.

By March, life was almost back to normal. But even as the terror of war and disease receded, one final local victim lost her life in service to her country. Jeanette Virginia Barrows was the daughter of Will Barrows, a Chinook Observer artist and writer. A well-known and popular Peninsula girl, Barrows was also remarkably independent for her time. After high school, she went to University of Washington and earned a teaching degree. She went on to a nationally-recognized Army training course for women at Reed College in Portland.

In fall 1918, the Seattle Times announced that she was on her way to New York, and then to an army hospital in war-torn France, as part of the American Expeditionary Forces. Barrows was slated to do “reconstruction work” — physical and occupational therapy with injured soldiers. However, plans changed when the armistice was signed just before her departure.

Army leaders sent Barrows and the other new AEF girls to army bases in the Midwest to wait while they planned their strategy in France. Barrows was assigned to the hospital at Fort Snelling, near St. Paul, Minnesota. While caring for sick soldiers, she caught the flu.

On March 13, her parents received a telegram that said she was deathly ill. Her mother took an eastbound train at the first opportunity, but she never saw her daughter alive again. At a train station in Montana, she learned that her daughter had died of pneumonia on March 15, at the age of 26.

Barrows was buried in Ilwaco. Her grieving friends and family commissioned a plaque to commemorate her service, and displayed it in her family’s church in Chinook. At Chinook School, they planted memorial trees for her and a young soldier who died around the same time. The trees were torn down long ago, but one tribute to her service and sacrifice still stands: the handsomely engraved ornament that decorates her headstone in Ilwaco Cemetery.
