Groups want in on case of Washington state coal terminal

By PHUONG LE
Associated Press

SEATTLE — BNSF Railway and five environmental groups are seeking to intervene on opposing sides of a lawsuit brought against Washington state by developers of a blocked export terminal that would send U.S. coal to Asian markets.

Utah-based Lighthouse Resources, which operates coal mines in Montana and Wyoming, sued Washington state officials in federal court in Tacoma in November. The lawsuit alleges state officials violated federal laws in denying permits for its $680 million Millennium Bulk Terminals-Longview project.

The terminal aimed to move up to 44 million tons of coal by train through a terminal in Longview, Washington, for export to Asia. Environmentalists and Indian tribes have opposed the plans because of concerns about global warming, coal dust pollution and potential damage to fisheries on the river.

Last fall the Washington Department of Ecology denied the project a key water-quality permit. And a local hearing examiner also has denied the project two shoreline permits.

On Tuesday, the Washington Environmental Council, Columbia Riverkeeper and other groups that actively opposed the terminal filed a motion seeking to intervene on behalf of the state in the case.

The groups say the range and extent of harmful impacts from the single project is staggering and they have a deep interest in what happens in the case.

In a separate filing Tuesday, BNSF Railway asked a federal judge to let it intervene as a plaintiff. It said in a statement Wednesday that state officials violated federal law by denying permits based on so-called rail impacts.

BNSF said state officials also interfered with BNSF's ability to engage in foreign commerce by moving coal to Millennium for shipment to Japan, South Korea and other Asian countries.

Millennium, a subsidiary of Lighthouse, has filed several lawsuits against the state. A state judge ruled in favor of Millennium in October, saying the state acted arbitrarily when it blocked a sublease sought for the project.

In a court filing last week, lawyers for the state have asked the federal judge to dismiss many of the claims and abstain on others.

Astoria secures grant to help renovate homes

The Daily Astorian

Astoria has received a $400,000 grant from Business Oregon to help low-income residents in Northwest Oregon improve their homes.

The funds will provide no-interest, deferred payment loans to homeowners in Clatsop, Columbia and Tillamook counties whose incomes are at or below 80 percent of the median income.

The loans can be used to repair and renovate homes to meet health, safety and security standards, with a focus on handicap accessibility. The money can also be used for the repair or replacement of roofs, heating and electrical systems; mold abatement; and other items that make a home unsafe.

The average loan is expected to be $14,570 and matched with weatherization funds from the Community Action Team.

ON THE RECORD

DUII

- At 9:56 p.m. Wednesday, Lisa Hankwitz, 43, of Astoria, was arrested by the Clatsop County Sheriff's Office on the 91950 block of Youngs River Road and charged with driving under the influence of intoxicants.

- At 2:44 p.m. Wednesday, Cassandra Jane Bryant, 36, of Woodland, Washington, was arrested by Astoria police on the 140 block of 11th Street and charged with DUII, reckless driving, two counts of giving false information to a police officer, identity theft, failure to carry a license and driving while suspended. Her blood alcohol content was 0.24 percent.

- At 11:45 p.m. Tuesday, Richard Blair Hassett, 58, of Shelton, Washington, was arrested by Astoria police on the 220 block of Marine Drive and charged with driving under the influence of intoxicants. He allegedly also refused to take a breath test.
