Representatives from Astoria Middle School received a grant from the Portland Trail Blazers and Wells Fargo at a special presentation March 17 at the Moda Center.

The Trail Blazers Foundation and Wells Fargo awarded $110,000 in grants benefiting hundreds of high risk and low-and moderate-income students at 24 schools in 19 rural and urban cities across Oregon and Southwest Washington.

Astoria Middle School received the largest grant, $9,500, which will be used to update and repair the basketball hoops and backboards for its gyms.

The other 23 grants ranged from $500 to $7,500, based on the scope and costs associated with the project or program seeking funds.

Astoria Middle School principal Linda Brech, physical education teacher Eric Gohr and Astoria High boys basketball coach Kevin Goin helped secure the grant.

Through their fourth annual "Take It To the Court for Education" program, the Trail Blazers Foundation and Wells Fargo distributed the grant checks during a special reception during the Detroit vs. Portland basketball game.

Gohr was on hand at the game to accept the check for Astoria Middle School.

Teachers, school staff, administrators, parents and community members had submitted more than 300 applications in pursuit of grants for their local schools. A committee of community leaders managed the review process to determine this year's winners.

"This is the culmination of an important partnership that has allowed the Trail Blazers Foundation and Wells Fargo to channel much-needed dollars directly into schools and classrooms," said Trail Blazers and Rose Quarter President & CEO Chris McGowan.
