Runners in the Hood to Coast Relay finish in Seaside.

Deal: Seaside was selected as the race's destination in 1989

Hood to Coast indemnifies the city from liability and provides a toll-free phone number as a means of communications the week before and after the event.

Funds from the relay raised more than $730,000 for Providence Cancer Center in 2017. The Seaside Chamber of Commerce netted another $30,000 by staffing and operating the event's beer garden.

Hood to Coast races take place throughout the U.S. and internationally, including Israel, Taiwan and China.

Unlike the 2015 meeting, where Seaside merchants presented a petition signed by 87 businesses seeking a race date change or cancellation, the agreement Monday night met with unanimous approval.

logue we had, we wouldn't be talking about the multi-year agreement," Floyd said. "We want to keep communication open. Not just here in Seaside, but along the 200-mile course. We want to continue to improve."

City Councillor Seth Morrissey called the relay a "net positive impact on the community."

"In the last couple of years, Hood to Coast has worked to improve the event, implement a lot of things we've asked for, and I'm happy to move forward with this agreement," Morrissey said.

Manufacturer to close St. Helens plant in May

Associated Press

PORTLAND — A Pennsylvania-based ceiling tiles manufacturer has announced it will lay off 136 workers when it closes its St. Helens plant in May.

The Oregonian reported that Armstrong World Industries Inc. announced that it will shut down the plant on May 31, causing more than 30 fabrication technicians, 20 board mill technicians, 14 mechanical technicians and others to lose their jobs.

The company first announced closing the plant in November.

The company said last fall that employees who lost their jobs at the St. Helens plant would be able to apply for new jobs at other plants within the country, if they met the job requirements and would consider moving.

Severance packages would be given to others who will be no longer working for the company.

Closure of Seattle Russian consulate frustrates travelers

By GENE JOHNSON
Associated Press

SEATTLE — The Trump administration's decision to shutter the Russian consulate in Seattle displeased many Russian immigrants Monday, some of whom rushed to its offices in hopes of securing passports, visas and other important documents.

One woman, who identified herself as a dual

U.S.-Russian citizen from Boise, Idaho, said she spent $1,000 traveling to Seattle to renew a passport so that she could visit her brother in Russia — only to be turned away. Another, Luda Rieve, of San Diego, told The Seattle Times she too was turned away after taking the day off work and flying from California to renew her passport.

Many procedures handled by the consulate require in-person appearances, and because the administration also ordered the San Francisco consulate closed last September, the only facilities remaining are in New York, Houston and Washington, D.C.

"My sister is at the consulate right now trying to get a travel passport," said David Mordekhov, a Seattle lawyer and Moscow native who moved to the U.S. 20 years ago.

 Dr. Robert Pyle
 A Columbia Forum Presentation

One of the Pacific Northwest's most acclaimed nature writers, Dr. Robert Michael Pyle of Grays River, Washington, is a lighthearted, insightful and amusing speaker on topics ranging from Bigfoot to butterflies. He literally wrote the book on both topics, and is the author of "The Butterflies of Cascadia," the comprehensive field guide to all the species of Oregon and Washington.

A graduate of the Yale School of Forestry & Environmental Studies, Pyle's 1987 book, "Wintergreen" won the John Burroughs Medal for its insights about how industrial forestry damaged the land, waters and people of the Willapa Hills of Southwest Washington. He and his Wahkiakum County neighbor Krist Novoselic, co-founder of the legendary rock group Nirvana, are currently collaborating on a mélange of acoustic guitar music and poetry.
