TOMORROW'S NATIONAL WEATHER

Oysterville Sea Farms prevails at appeals court

Chinook Observer

OYSTERVILLE, Wash. — Dan Driscoll is within his rights to sell beer, wine and seafood picnic-type items while providing limited seating for customers at his historic oyster-processing market on the shore of Willapa Bay, the Washington State Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday.

The ruling may end an expensive regulatory onslaught that began more than a decade ago. Pacific County asserted, among other things, that clam chowder is not a seafood-related product.

The Pacific County Department of Community Development had asked the Court of Appeals to overturn decisions by lower courts that were largely in Driscoll's favor. Although Driscoll's family has operated Oysterville Sea Farms for generations, the county said that by offering additional retail products and providing a place to consume them, Driscoll went beyond what is allowed by zoning and shoreline regulations.

Driscoll and his supporters said the county's opposition to his business practices was a classic case of intrusive government overreach, while county officials took the position that permitting a wider variety of products to be sold and consumed at the Oysterville facility would set a precedent for additional commercial development elsewhere along the bayshore.

The Court of Appeals rejected the county's arguments and even reversed a District Court ruling that Driscoll had committed minor zoning and shoreline infractions.

The bottom line is that appellate judges found no reason why Driscoll should not be allowed to sell a variety of products typical of seafood markets, including beer and wine, while customers are permitted to eat and drink their purchases while seated on indoor stools or outdoors on a deck overlooking the bay.

"I contend that throughout this long and difficult process, I have been the reasonable party," Driscoll said Wednesday in a written statement. "I am and always have been anxious to work with Pacific County. Best available science and best available legal decisions are a legitimate basis from which Pacific County government and I can resolve this long, damaging, unnecessary conflict."

Mary Weinsoft

Jerry passed away in 1976, and she moved back to Portland a year later, where she worked for Gevurtz Furniture.

In 1986, she married Ben Weinsoft, who passed in 1992. Mary is survived by eight of her nine grandchildren, and by 13 great-grandchildren.

A funeral for Mary was held on Sunday, April 8, 2018, at 4 p.m., in Gevurtz Chapel at Ahavai Shalom Cemetery. Committal followed in Ahavai Shalom Cemetery. Contributions in Mary's memory may be made to Cedar Sinai Park.
